There was a time when most people thought that blind people could never learn to read. People thought that the (51) _____ way to read was to look at words with your eyes. A French boy named Louis Braille thought otherwise.

Louis Braille was born (52) _____ 1809. His father made leather harnesses (53) _____ other leather goods. Louis's father often used sharp tools to cut and punch holes in the leather.

One of the tools he used was a sharp awl. An awl (54) _____ a tool that looks like a short pointed stick. While playing with his father's awl, Louis's hand slipped and he accidentally poked (55) _____ of his eyes. At first the injury did not seem (56) _____, but later, the wound became infected and also affected the other eye. In a few days, young Louis (57) _____ his sight in both his eyes. The first few days after becoming blind were very hard.

As the days (58) _____ by, Louis learned to adapt and to lead an otherwise normal life. At a special school for the blind, he asked his teacher if the school had (59) _____ for blind persons to read. Louis found that the school did have books for the blind but the books were large and bulky (60) _____ the letters were extremely big. More importantly, the books were expensive to buy so there were few. The school had only fourteen of (61) _____.

Louis set about reading all fourteen books. The letters were raised off the page. He could feel each letter with his fingers, but it took him a (62) _____ time to read a sentence. It took a few seconds just to 'read' one word. By the time he reached the (63) _____ of a sentence, he had almost forgotten what the beginning of the sentence was. Louis knew there must be a better (64) _____ for a blind person to quickly feel the words on a page.

That day, he set himself the (65) _____ of thinking up a system for blind people to read. He would try to create some alphabet code to make 'finger reading' as quick and easy as sighted reading.

Read the passage and answer questions 71 to 80. (20 marks)

The work was not easy in the fire-lit kitchen of the eating house that always seemed to grow hotter. The eating house was never quite shut and customers streamed in, day or night. Jagu kept his promise of paying Hari ten rupees a day which came to seventy rupees a week, good enough wages for a young boy new to the work. Since Hari got his meals free, he could save all that money for his family, and he was grateful for it. What he minded was not being able to go home when the work was done. He worked in the kitchen and in the front room, bathed under the tap at the back, and slept at a table or on the dusty floor.

Outside, the traffic ground past all through the night. People poured out from the cinemas nearby, shouting and singing songs from late-night shows. Hari's tired eyes longed for the dark and quiet nights of his seaside village far away. He missed his invalid mother and younger sisters who were there. He had been away for only a season to work but it seemed like a lifetime.

He would have fallen ill from lack of sleep if he had not one midnight gotten up and sat on the pavement because it was a degree cooler than in the eating house with its heat, stale smells and suffocating air. The old watch-mender, who had stayed late to finish working on a watch he had promised to have ready, came over to him and said, "Can't sleep in there, boy? My room is just as bad. Why don't you go and sleep in the park?" He laughed quietly and limped off.

Hari was always to be grateful to the watch-mender for his advice. The city park was only a dusty square with patches of worn grass, wooden benches and some trees, surrounded by very old buildings; but still, it had a bench to lie on, birds to listen to, and trees to look at. It was more bearable than sleeping in the kitchen of the eating house. When he put his feet down, he felt grass, not hard, cruel concrete.

On the first night that Hari lay down on the bench, the policeman who watched over the park stalked across to him and growled empty threats, "Go home, boy, or I'll lock you in a police station." Hari had just felt the luxury of putting his feet up after a hard day's work, and now he sat up, miserable. The policeman had a baton and some rolled-up newspapers. He was about to hit Hari's legs with the papers when an old man who was walking by, tapping his walking stick, spoke to him.

"Why bully a poor harmless boy who has nowhere to sleep?" he piped up in a high voice like a child's. "Why not go after the thugs, thieves, murderers? Why not start with those drunkards in that corner over there? We are afraid to come to this park because of them – not because of this poor boy."

The policeman chewed his moustache uncertainly. "Hr-umph," he grunted, not knowing what to do. The bent old man had made him feel ashamed of bullying a hardworking, weary child when there was real work for him to do. Suddenly, he cried loudly, "Who are these people? Where are they? I'd better go and see!" Then, he left. The old man chuckled to himself, winked at Hari, and hobbled off.

After that, Hari entered the park every night and the policeman greeted him. Hari felt safe and even grand to have a policeman guard him while he slept!

I am a flight instructor. One of my students was having great trouble landing the aircraft. He could not assess (16) how close to the ground he should be before getting the plane's nose up.

Strangely enough, during our first night-time lesson, he did an excellent job. On each approach, just when I thought I was going to have to intervene (17), he would pull back on the stick and make a beautiful landing.

I asked him what visual reference he was using (18) since there were few clues in the dark. "I just aimed (19) for the end-of-the-runway lights," he told me in a tone so firm (20). Then he waited until I stiffened in my seat, whereupon he would pull back and land.

Read this passage and answer questions 71 to 80. (20 marks)

The sky was bright that Saturday. We got out of the car and yelled, "Bye, Mum!" Then we headed down the steep stairway to a platform, Ben's train would be along shortly. Trains for Ben, not yet four, are a passion. They speak to him. They are his friends, non-threatening and exciting. Their engines huff and puff across the countryside and tell him wondrous tales in his bed at night. Our train pulled in and sat motionless, poised to head out.

We held hands because of the dangerous, wide gap between the platform and the train. The physical contact felt good. Ben needs me, too. I am acutely aware of his magnetic link to his mother. We jumped onto the train and then, as other people came and went, Ben suddenly looked back at the platform and yelped, "Look Dad, your CNN card."

My work identification card was lying on the platform by the open door. It surprised me and I quickly told Ben to stay where he was while I fetched it. In an instant I was on the platform, only a long step from the doors, bent over and recovering my card. When I heard Ben yell, "Let me help," my hand shot up instinctively in the universal language of "No."

Ben tumbled into that narrow space between the platform and the train like a shiny coin disappearing into a piggy bank. It was a slow-motion movie sequence and I was powerless to stop it. A quick glance up at me, expressionless and then, he vanished.

It was a blur then but I think I caused it. I did not know he had jumped to follow and I think it was my extended arm that knocked him back and down the slot. It took a moment to register. Ben was squeezed in between the platform and the train, thousands of tonnes of huffing, wheezing steel ready to roar on. No longer non-threatening, it was a metal monster about to eat my son.

As a journalist, I have covered bloody conflicts from Lebanon to El Salvador but I had never known razor-sharp terror like that uncertain moment when a little person, your little person, is in mortal danger and you do not know what to do.

The lesson of the Beirut rooftop came clear: do something. When you hear the hiss of a rocket-propelled grenade, you have about two seconds. Just do something. Anything.

I pleaded with startled passengers not to let the doors close. Unless its doors closed, the train could not start. People were horrified and motionless. Mannequins. No one knew what to do.

"Ben, don't move!" I yelled, as my eyes adjusted to the darkness down there. A tiny statue. I saw him crouching in front of a wheel twice his size.

"Put your hands in the air. High. As high as you can!" He was trying to get to his feet. Two little tightly-clenched fists appeared below the level of the platform. I dropped to my belly and scooped up the dazed child I had just knocked down there in the first place.

I will not stop thinking about this for a long time. I hope Ben does.

Beneficiaries' Stories

Nick Tan is a beneficiary of The School Lunch Money Fund (TSLMF). The $95 a month he receives covers some of his school-related expenses.

Two years ago, he was a rebellious boy who often loitered on the streets. Today, Nick, 14, is one of the top students in his class and spends his free time playing badminton.

Nick's 50-year-old mother is disabled. His father, 52, works as a bus driver. His salary is hardly enough for the family of six, which includes Nick's three young sisters.

The monthly allowance from TSLMF helps the family to make ends meet. "It assists us with our expenses," said Nick's mother, Madam Cheng.

Nick said that the money pays for necessities like food and his transportation to school. "I don't have to worry very much and can concentrate on my studies.... In future, I would like to help others as others have helped me."

This is the story of Elicia binte Basir, told in her own words.

Before, life was not as easy as now. My mom had to take care of us on her own. She would sacrifice her own needs and wants in order to ensure we received an education. She also tried to give us what we wanted. Though she gave us the 'green light' to indulge occasionally in our wants, my siblings and I always tried hard to save money because we knew how hard it was for our mother.

The situation deteriorated when my mom started having severe headaches, stomach aches and frequent vomiting. We were worried and our studies were affected. She was diagnosed with cancer and could not go out to work. Nor could she be at home. I visited her every day at the hospital. I would go from home to school, from school to the hospital, and then back home at night. This cycle continued till she was finally discharged.

It was a crucial year for me as I had major exams in secondary school. I used whatever time I had at the hospital and at home to study furiously.

The School Lunch Money Fund (TSLMF) came into our lives and aided us financially and emotionally. Our problems were not all solved but the burden was lightened. We saw a ray of light in the midst of the darkened paths. We were motivated to work harder and thankfully, we achieved satisfactory results. After my mom was healed, the TSLMF assisted to reduce her worries.

Read this passage and answer questions 71 to 80. (20 marks)

Five-year-old Jocelyn Rojas spent all day riding happily outside her grandmother's apartment building. Her mother, Jaimee, kept her eye on the little girl from a window.

At about 4 p.m., Jocelyn rode around the corner of the building and disappeared.

"I took my eyes off her for five minutes, and she was gone," says Jaimee. The frantic mother called out to her daughter as she scoured the complex. "I knew something was wrong," she recalled, especially when she saw that Jocelyn's bike was still there and found an old credit card her daughter had been playing with abandoned near the bike racks. Jaimee called the police.

A short time later, police officers and firefighters searched the suburban neigbourhood, blockading streets and alleys. The authorities handed out a photo of the blond, pixie-faced girl with a gap-toothed grin wearing thick-framed glasses. In all, at least 100 people assisted in the search for the missing girl.

Temar Boggs, 15, was moving a couch into the apartment of his elderly neighbour with some friends, when one searcher approached him and asked if he had seen Jocelyn. None of them had seen her.

A little bit later, Temar and his friends walked over to Jocelyn's block to check out the situation when he noticed the police still waiting around the house.

By 6:30 p.m., Jocelyn had been missing for more than two hours. The authorities were getting worried as the sun was setting and that would make the search more difficult. Also, the longer they took, the chances of finding her would be diminished further.

Again, Temar was approached with a photo of the little girl. At that moment, he felt an intense emotion he had never experienced before. He felt that he was going to find her. He hastily turned to one of his friends and said, "Hey, can I borrow your bike?"

As he sped away on the borrowed BMX, his friend Chris, rode alongside him. The boys searched frantically, without a plan, simply keeping an eye out as they pedalled past the lush lawns of the wealthy neighbourhood.

Then, Temar spotted a maroon car veering down a side street and looping back, as if the driver was unfamiliar with the neighbourhood. He whizzed after it. The car suddenly made an abrupt U-turn when it reached the top of a hill - a group of police officers and firefighters had congregated there. The car passed the boys as it circled back down the hill. Temar made eye contact with the man behind the wheel, and noticed a tiny blond girl in the passenger seat.

Temar instantly knew it was her. The boys chased the car. For several minutes, the driver kept moving, slowly winding his way through the neighbourhood.

Finally, the driver stopped at a curb several hundred metres away, opened the passenger-side door for Jocelyn to slip out, and then sped away. The boys had found Jocelyn.

After being returned to her mother's waiting embrace, Jocelyn was taken to the police headquarters and questioned. She told the police that the kidnapper had driven his car up to her and chatted pleasantly with her about her bicycle. Then, she said he leaped across the front seat and grabbed her neck, forcing her into the car. A police report later identified the 63-year-old child-abductor.

Temar and Chris' daring act was praised by the authorities and Jocelyn's mother, but Temar maintained that he was not thinking about bravery. "I just wanted to help. I will do it again, for anybody else."

Layout of the new track

"Our supporters are going to love this new track as the wide track enhances wheel-to-wheel racing and it can race 10 to 15 people at any one time!" said owner, Robin Gan. "I agree with Mr Gan. The track is more challenging and exciting because the wheel-to-wheel racing will encourage more overtaking," said Mr Marc Webb, a Formula 1 driver.

Honda GX270cc E85 Fueled-Engine

About the Go-Karts – Founded in 2000, LeMont Go-Karting is Singapore's longest running go-kart racing and meeting facility. Powered by a special fuel called E85 ethanol, their European built karts are "greener" than electric-only karts, can run continuously for more than two hours and are rated to 80 kilometres per hour. LeMont Go-Karting brings the thrill of real racing excitement for drivers of all skill levels.

Read the passage and answer questions 71 to 80. (20 marks)

Dear Beloved Grandchildren,

As I celebrate my 80th birthday today, I thought to share a story about Professor Ed who was an inspiration to me.

I had always been the perfect student with fantastic grades, outstanding sporting achievements and character awards until my fourth year at university when I received 100% achievement in all my modules, except for one. Although the university recognized it as the highest ever achievement in their proud history, I was perturbed as I knew that while my classmates respected my brilliance, they also hated the snobbish manner in which I spoke to them. So, I glared at them as I walked off the stage after receiving my award. Ed congratulated me and invited me to take a walk down to the Hall of Fame. The Hall of Fame turned out to be just a huge wall behind an old staircase! Ed pointed to a picture of my grandfather, Chad William, and I was surprised to see it hanging there! Ed shared that although I had received the Distinguished Gold Medal, he believed that I could feel that there was something missing. His words struck a chord and I felt a chill run down my spine. Everyone knew that I was a competitive individual but they just did not understand that what I really wanted was to get a perfect score for all my modules! I almost achieved it if not for that final module in Service Learning where I scored a B!

I pretended that it did not affect me but Ed continued with his explanation that Service Learning was not about developing an intellectual genius. He recognised my efforts but my true intention was not correct. He reckoned that I was not doing it for the old folks but I was doing it for the grade. I insisted that I should not be judged for my intent and said that my classmate, Ben, did not deserve an 'A plus!' as he did not write and present his ideas as well as I did. Ed did not relent but explained that Ben spent hours talking to the old folks and finding out what their real needs were. He explained further that I may have beaten Ben with my eloquence but in terms of an untainted intention to help, Ben had won and the founders of Anglo-Chinese School would be so proud of him because he held true to the original vision of the school.

With that, I remembered what my grandfather used to say. He said that good grades would only take one so far in life but after that, there would be a whole host of other skills that one needed to succeed like putting others before self. Your great grandfather pursued academic excellence but he was also a man of pure character, dedicated to a life of service to others.

So my dear grandchildren, I hope you have learnt a lesson from this story and you will find great joy in going to school. Do remember that grades are not everything and it is important that you receive a holistic and complete education of the mind, heart and body. The Best Is Yet To Be.

Your loving Grandpa

Dogs are known as the most loyal animals. They are often regarded as (16) man's best friends.

Owing to their loving nature towards their owners, dogs provide (17) companionship and have even been used in therapy for sick children and the lonely elderly. Some dogs are trained as guide dogs to assist the visually-impaired in their daily lives.

With their keen (18) sense of smell, dogs are very useful in identifying and nabbing criminals. Dogs are also good at sniffing out victims in disasters such as landslides or earthquakes. This has helped save many lives.

Some dogs are particularly (19) good at following commands and know when to attack and when not to. Such dogs make good guard dogs and help to keep our homes safe.

Despite the usefulness of dogs, many people mistreat (20) them. Some pet owners neglect their dogs when they get tired of them, or when their pets grow old. They simply discard their unwanted pets like a piece of used furniture.

Fiesta@Ace Primary School

The Story behind Fiesta@Ace Primary School

Ace Primary School was founded in 1930. Its founders Mr and Mrs Robert Tan ran a successful textile business. Born into poor families, they had little in childhood and were always hungry. However, through sheer hard work and perseverance, they built up their textile business and soon were enjoying a comfortable life. They noticed that many of their fellow villagers at that time were not so fortunate. This led them to bring together the villagers to build a school for the children in the village. They believed that with education, the children would have a better future.

In Ace Primary School, we believe in building a better future for ourselves. Every three years, we organise the ever-popular Fiesta@Ace Primary School to raise funds. The money raised goes to our needy pupils so that they do not need to worry about pocket money.

My father used to work as a truck driver. Last year, he was involved in an accident and injured his leg. As a result, he has not been working since. We were initially very worried. We were at a loss as to what to do as he could no longer afford to give me pocket money.

With the pocket money I receive from the school, I can enjoy meals during recess. I can study better since I now do not have to worry about my grumbling tummy. I really appreciate the kind gesture of the school.

I was born without arms and legs. As a child, _____ (51) of my biggest fears was getting shots. Due to my physical disabilities, my bottom touches the ground when I walk. _____ (52) I got an injection at my bottom, it would be very painful for me to walk for the rest of the day. Just hearing that I was getting shots was enough to fill me _____ (53) trepidation.

Once when I was twelve, I was sitting in my wheelchair in my doctor's office. He told me he was giving me a shot. Quick as a flash, I jumped to the floor and headed _____ (54) the door!

Alas! It was all in _____ (55). In the end, I was pinned _____ (56) by two very strong nurses. I wriggled but the doctor gave me a shot nonetheless. I was about to heave a sigh of _____ (57) when the doctor informed me that he had not injected at the right spot because I kept moving. Sternly, he announced, "I need to give you _____ (58) shot."

This time, I _____ (59) the bullet and remained as still as I could. The pain was unbearable as anxiety ran wild in me. I had only needed one shot, but since I tried to _____ (60) away from fear, I had to get another one and received twice the pain. Regret washed over me.

This humiliating lesson was one I would never forget. I realised that if I had courage, I would not have needed to go through the same pain twice unnecessarily.

Lynn lay in bed, her complexion green-tinged instead of rosy.

"She looks gross," I commented.

"Shut up!" snapped my mother. I stepped back, as if she had struck me. I had never heard my delicate, polite mother use such language.

"I suddenly felt dizzy when I was doing my homework," Lynn said.

My father turned to my little brother, Sam, and me with a deep frown on his face. "You two sleep in the living room tonight. Maybe it's contagious," he sighed heavily.

Recently, Lynn had got tired more often. I had been hearing my parents talk about her a lot. Meanwhile, they scolded Sam and me more and more frequently. They did not really have time for us anymore because they liked to spend all their time thinking about Lynn.

When Lynn felt good, she had a lot of energy, so I never thought of her as sickly. In our home, money was tight but she was the only one of us who ever went to the doctor. The doctor usually gave her some tablets which she could suck on. Sam and I were jealous of the 'sweets' she had. In addition, she got to stay home from school whenever she was sick. How unfair!

As I looked at Lynn lying on bed, pale as a sheet, I was overwhelmed with gnawing envy. As my parents stayed with Lynn in the bedroom, I filled the tub for Sam and gave him a bath. After that, I got his pyjamas for him and made up the couch for him to sleep on. Ordinarily, I did not like to do work around the house, but taking care of Sam was the exception.

With Sam sleeping on the couch, it meant I had to sleep on the hard living-room floor. "If Lynn was contagious, we would get sick just living in the same apartment. Sleeping in the living room makes no difference!" I groused under my breath.

I took a bath using the water Sam had bathed in. Then, I laid out some blankets on the living-room floor, and got ready to sleep. In a few minutes, my mother walked into the room. "How many times do I have to tell you to wipe off the ring of soap residue around the bathtub?" she cried exasperatedly. I groaned inwardly; I knew my mother was particular about cleanliness. My father came up behind her, just as annoyed. I could feel the feelings of unjust rising in me again.

Months later, I found out Lynn was suffering from anaemia, a medical condition that made her tired and weak. I realised how insensible I had been!

My husband and I took our parents and three children on this tour. The driver, Mr Raj, and guide, Mr Tony, took good care of us throughout the trip. Mr Tony knew so much about all the places we visited and was so humorous. All of us enjoyed listening to his commentaries! The meals definitely satisfied our appetites for quality, authentic local food. Also, my children had fun trying all the different types of fruits they had never even seen before! We had a great time!

Read this passage and answer questions 71 to 80. (20 marks)

A surge of excitement bubbled within Sean as he approached the village, carrying the biscuits. Fresh food was not something to be shared with anyone except with his mother and his little sister, Annie. The village was silent, empty of people.

His home was like any other cottage in the village. It was a building made of stone. It had the tallest chimney in the village and its chimney stood proudly out from the roof. The chimney was his father's pride and joy. Sean had witnessed the hard work that his father put into building the cottage many years ago.

"The higher a chimney is, son, the more smoke it draws," he explained to Sean when all the neighbours scoffed at his gigantic chimney. When it was finished, he sat upon it with a drink in his hand. Watching the sunset, he threw back his head and laughed with the neighbours for it was indeed a monster of a chimney.

" Truly a wonderful creation," Sean repeated his father's words aloud and the thought of him brought a smile to his eyes.

The door was stiff and heavy , so Sean stuffed the biscuits down his shirt to leave both his hands free to open it. His mother and Annie lay together where he had left them that morning. Annie had kept her promise. The fire was still roaring in the fireplace and keeping the house warm.

"Well, Sean, dear, is it food that you're bringing us this time?" his mother asked. This was asked with no bitterness and no blame but in a voice drained of all hope.

"What would you say to a few biscuits, Mother? Great and thick oatmeal ones," Sean replied. Annie immediately threw her arms around his neck and hugged him, as if she would never let go. "Annie, I managed to get these biscuits for all of us!" he exclaimed with pride in his voice.

His mother struggled to get up Sean recognized the cold blue hand of starvation on her face. Her face was of the same colour as Danny's, Mary's and little Joes before they died. He had know it for a few days now so it did not come as a shock to him, but a terrible sadness welled up inside him at the sight of her.

"Is it true that you have biscuits for us, Sean?" she said with a tint of disbelief, her words punctuated by a rasping cough that took hold of her and shook her. Sean held up the biscuits in triumph.

"There'll be one for you, Annie and me," he said.

"Can I eat it all, Mother?" asked Annie, caressing the biscuit. Can I eat it all today?"

"Every bit, Annie dear. But eat slowly," murmured their mother. "It could be very dry."

The three wolfed down the biscuits . Every crumb was picked up from the ground and eaten. After they had licked their fingers clean, Sean sighed in anxiety, "When will be our next meal?"

When Town Convent first opened its doors in 1854, founder Mother Mathilde set up an orphanage alongside the school. Word travelled (16) that the sisters were caring for orphans. Soon, babies wrapped in rags started appearing at the convent gates. Left by their parents, these babies were frail (17), sometimes disabled and most were girls.

To support the abandoned children they had taken in (18), the sisters began sewing for rich clients. They made clothes for the European ladies and were able to earn a steady (19) income that way. The sisters also received donations from the public.

The number of children grew drastically (20) after the Japanese Occupation and the sisters found it difficult to take care of so many children at once. Despite the sisters' best efforts, some babies did not survive. Those who did, however, entered the convent school and received free education.

Mention Pipi Island and the first thought that comes to everyone's minds will probably be Abi Hills. The distinctive restaurants and cosy cafes serving drinks and delicious food in this area is located on the eastern part of Pipi Island. However, few know of the story behind its name.

In the 1820s, Kendrick Mason's businesses in Europe had failed after a series of unfortunate incidents that were of no fault of his. He headed for Asia together with his wife, Abigail, to start life afresh. Having heard from a friend about a prospering island and the opportunities that it offered, the couple decided to settle down on the island.

While Kendrick worked hard to build a business, Abigail put her excellent cooking skills to good use, earning a reasonable income by preparing meals for factory workers. To Abigail's delight, the workers began to speak so highly of her delicious lunchboxes that even the factory owners and managers wanted to give them a try. Soon, Kendrick realised that Abigail had gradually built a reputation for herself and encouraged her to set up a small eatery. One thing led to another and after years of hard work, they were proud owners of several eateries in an area that came to be called Abi Hills.

For each question from 21 to 28, shade your answer (1, 2, 3 or 4) on the Optical Answer Sheet.

21 Why are exclamation marks used in the game show host's speech?

(1) to shock the readers
(2) to show his excitement
(3) to give his opinions firmly
(4) to promise readers prizes

22 Based on the flyer, which of the following is true of the game show?

(1) An audition will be conducted during the game show.
(2) All participants will receive prizes worth up to $10 000.
(3) The game show will test participants' knowledge about Pipi Island.
(4) Gina will inform participants about the requirements of participation.

23 Rachel wants to attend the audition. Which of the following is not compulsory for her to do?

(1) ensure that she has set up an email account
(2) contact Gina to ask questions about the game show
(3) bring her identification card and a passport-sized photograph with her
(4) go to Channel 21's Main Studio on 30 November 2016 anytime from 9 a.m. to 3 p.m.

24 According to the write-up on Abi Hills, it is now an area _____.

(1) few people know about
(2) with only a small eatery
(3) where Kendrick and Abigail live
(4) known for its restaurants and cafes

25 Were Kendrick and Abigail people who gave up easily, and why?

(1) Yes, because they came to Asia when their business failed in Europe.
(2) Yes, because they aimed to earn just enough to survive.
(3) No, because they put their past failures aside to start life afresh.
(4) No, because they relied on their friends for help.

26 In the third paragraph of the write-up on Abi Hills, a reputation refers to _____.

(1) the eateries in Abi Hills
(2) Abigail's desire to set up a small eatery
(3) the factory workers, managers and owners
(4) Abigail's ability to prepare delicious lunchboxes

(Go on to the next page)

27 Based on the flyer, which of the following is not true?

(1) Abi Hills is an area on the eastern side of Pipi Island.
(2) 'What's the Story?' has never been broadcast before.
(3) People associate Abi Hills with drinks and delicious food.
(4) Kendrick discouraged Abigail from setting up a small eatery.

28 What is the main aim of the flyer?

(1) to learn how Abi Hill got its name
(2) to prepare selected participants for the game show
(3) to encourage people to attend the game show audition
(4) to learn how Kendrick and Abigail set up their eateries in Pipi Island

Peering out from the leafy shelter of the path, Dawan watched the villagers gather outside her home. They had come to bid Dawan farewell. Dawan was finally leaving the village to go to a better school in the city. In the dim light of the house sat her grandmother.

"Don't be afraid, child. Calm down," her grandmother said gently. "I have put your new uniform and shoes on the mat there. Are the villagers all waiting for you outside? Never mind, child, take your time."

Dawan smiled gratefully at her grandmother and walked over to the mat where her things lay waiting. She bent down to put her shoes on and dressed hurriedly as she wondered, "Will I get used to studying in the city?" Her nervousness increased as she heard the sound of the heavy old bus rumbling in the distance. The last thing she wanted was to miss the only bus that could take her to the city.

"Child, you come here."

Dawan obediently crawled to the corner where her grandmother sat, and knelt down in front of the old woman. As her grandmother was her only caregiver since birth, it made saying goodbye to her most painful.

Her grandmother asked, "You have a long life ahead of you and this is just the first step. Gather yourself together and face the world out there boldly. You hear me?" Dawan nodded and calmed down after hearing her grandmother's soothing voice. Her grandmother gave her a gentle shove. "Well child, you must go now. You've packed everything you want to take with you, haven't you?"

Dawan stared at her blankly, then shook her head. "No, no, I can't go yet!" she blurted out. Swallowing hard, she continued desperately, "Grandmother, please, I'm not ready. I haven't packed everything yet. How about you? I can't pack you in my luggage! And how about my friends? I'll miss them." She tried hard to fight a sob rising from her throat, but could not stop it.

Her grandmother smiled and answered firmly, "My child, you will have a better future by going to the city. Don't be sad. Be brave. Go now, child."

The bus driver honked sharply. Dawan saw him wave frantically for her to board. Dawan took a deep breath, held her head up and walked out. She was ready to face the world.

Reading can be a leisure activity we partake in at the end of a long and tiring day to unwind and relax. Reading our favourite books undoubtedly gives us joy and satisfaction.

Non-fiction is a genre that not many children enjoy reading. It is in fact a very interesting genre. Biographies or stories of real people can be very inspirational (16) and can spur us to do much more with our own lives. This is especially so when we read stories of ordinary people who have overcome hard times (17) to live life meaningfully. In addition, these stories also deliver (18) important lessons on the values of determination, faith and courage.

Reading these books is a productive (19) way to make use of our leisure time to boost our knowledge. Hence, reading is not only a pleasurable form of entertainment but it also has many tangible (20) benefits. Try reading a non-fiction book to boost your general knowledge.

Circling the globe, the boreal forest - its name derived from Boreas, the Greek god of north wind - covers one-third of Earth's wooded lands. Half of the boreal

Scandinavia. The forest begin where the temperate woods of oak and maple

With long, cold winters and short, cool summers, the boreal woods have far

Read the passage below and answer questions 71 to 81. (20 marks)

On 14 October 2014, tracker dogs led some rangers to a group of armed poachers who were on the run. The poachers had shot and killed a well-known elephant just outside Tarangire National Park. This was the latest in a string of successes by Tanzania's tracker dogs. The dogs are proving to be an effective weapon in the war against elephant poaching in the extreme terrains and harsh climate of East Africa which are daunting for humans.

"Apart from their incredible tracking abilities, dogs are wonderful to work with because they don't have any political agenda," said Damien Bell, director of Big Life Tanzania, the conservation organisation that manages the Big Life Tracker Dog Unit.

It was early in the morning when rangers found the dead elephant, deep in the forested Lesimingori Mountains in Tanzania where protection for elephants is sometimes weaker. It died, from a single bullet to the head, after wandering into the rolling foothills in an attempt to migrate as it had done several times before.

Strangely, the animal's tusks were still in place when the authorities arrived at the scene in the morning. It appeared that the poachers were startled by fast-acting community members and rangers and had abandoned the carcass before they had time to remove its huge teeth and make their escape. For other anti-poaching operations, this is often the end of the story. Criminals escape. Scene is investigated. Report is written and filed away. However, this was not how it went down this time. Rocky and the Big Life Foundation Tracker Dog Unit were called in to pursue the criminals on foot.

Rocky arrived at the scene with his handlers, and soon he was sniffing and pacing up and down beside the dead elephant, about to explode with excitement. He had picked up the human scents from footprints near the carcass. It seemed that multiple people had been at the crime scene the night before. Then the dogs were off on their dusty trail. Rocky led the chase through the foothills and scrublands of the Lesirningori, frantically tugging his handler at the end of the lead. After five hours of relentless progress, the heat finally wore him down and his protégé, Rosdus, took over.

Rosdus, new to the unit, did not disappoint his mentor. He took the team all the way to the main highway, where the other dogs and handlers followed his lead through the town and into a particular home. There, a man admitted that the poachers had come to the house in the middle of the night, urgently asking to have their cell phones charged. After further interrogation, the man provided information that led directly to the capture of the suspects.

Since their arrival, Rocky and Rosdus have helped with countless anti-poaching operations, leading to numerous arrests. In fact, the dog teams have become so popular that the non-profit organisation, Tanzania National Parks (TANAPA), the Wildlife Division (a separate agency) and even government agencies like the police and military have requested for their assistance.

Canine sleuths are not limited to the plains of East Africa. In the Congo, bloodhounds are assisting in the fight against the poaching of the world's last remaining mountain gorillas. Anatolian shepherd dogs are also widely used in Africa to lessen human-wildlife conflict on farms, where the instinctively protective dogs defend livestock from predators.

In the past, people thought nothing of smokers lighting up in public areas. Recently, more and more people are (11) voicing their dislike for such a practice and legislation has been passed in countries like Singapore to ban smokers from smoking in public places. Smokers should not be (12) permitted to smoke in public places simply because public areas are meant for the common usage of all members of society. Smoking creates (13) detrimental effects on non-smokers, which is definitely unacceptable. When smokers light up, the (14) attainment of their wishes infringes upon what other people want. People have a social obligation not to do things that would cause others discomfort or unnecessary inconvenience when in public. For the majority in society, they just want a clean environment (15) untainted by cigarette smoke. The community can play an active role by reminding smokers not to light up in smoking prohibited places.

DEFORESTATION AND THE ORANG UTAN

The orang utan, a species of great ape known for its keen intelligence, is native to the tropical rainforests of Indonesia and Malaysia. The biggest threat to the orang utan today is deforestation. A 2007 assessment by the United Nations Environment Program predicts grimly that orang utans will be virtually eliminated in the wild within two decades if current deforestation trends continue. One study even shows that a forest area of about 300 soccer fields is being destroyed every hour!

While small independent farmers are cutting down strips of the rainforest to plant their crops, the main cause for deforestation in Indonesia and Malaysia is the spread of palm oil plantations. The Centre for Science in the Public Interest reports that over the last four decades, the total land area planted with oil palm has grown to over 3 million hectares in Indonesia and 3.5 million hectares in Malaysia. Palm oil plantations are now often cited as the leading cause of rainforest destruction in Malaysia and Indonesia.

Palm oil is often cultivated in an unsustainable way. The unsustainable establishment of mass palm oil plantations is harming the environment, indigenous communities and wildlife. Adult orang utans that are supremely adapted to life in trees almost never touch the ground. Thus, forest degradation, fragmentation and outright clearing—sometimes by intentionally-set fires are the main reasons for the species' population decline.

The burning of forests to clear land for palm oil plantations is also a major cause of air pollution in Southeast Asia. It releases carbon dioxide into the atmosphere, contributing to global warming.

Read the passage below and answer questions 71 to 81. (20 marks)

The crevice was a little more than a crack in the rough terrain, barely 50cm wide. Curious, Seth stood at its edge, poised to go in. It was just before noon on 20 June 2015. The sun was high in the sky but it was still chilly in the Nottawasaga Bluffs, a rugged area in a snow belt about 140km northeast of Toronto, Canada.

Seth knew the temperature inside the crevice will hover around -2°C. But he loved the challenge of exploring caves and crevices and he believed that his jeans, T-shirt and sturdy jacket should give him enough protection. "I won't be long," he thought.

Bracing his arms on the edge of the crevice to control his descent, he recalled the special technique of breathing in deeply and exhaling to relax his muscles to make his 1.83m tall, 70kg body as small as possible. Down, down he went, between the ice-covered walls.

It did not matter that he had neither a rope nor survival kit for he had done this countless times before without a problem. Coming to a stop on a ledge, he took out his phone and used it to illuminate his surroundings. The crevice walls came into glittering focus and his breath hovered in front of him. The smell was a mix of mould and earth - damp, heavy and dark.

After a few minutes, Seth realised that if he went any further, he would not be able to climb out. He stepped onto a rock, ready to hoist himself up and out of the crevice. To his horror, the rock gave way and Seth slid into the darkness. There was no time to cry out. There was no one to hear him even if he did.

Once he came to a stop, Seth took a few minutes to catch his breath. The sheer force of the fall had left him squashed against one jagged wall and his back red and raw against the one behind him.

"Stay calm," he told himself. He looked up and saw a crack of light about 20m above him. "Use the phone to call for help," he thought. But when he reached for his phone, he realised that there was no service that far underground.

Need a home tutor? Visit us at www.championtutor.com

One hour passed, then maybe two or three. In the dark, Seth had lost track of time. He wondered what his wife, Jamie, was doing and if she had realised that he was away for a long time. He did not tell her exactly where he was going. Every once in a while, he called out, "Help! Is anyone there?" There was no answer.

Then he heard shuffling and growls from above. What was it? There was a glint from a pair of eyes, staring through the opening. Relief flooded him. He had been found!

Fire Chief Colin and his team were at the scene. The rescue expert, David, put on a harness and a hard hat with a lantern. His colleagues lowered him 8m into the dark hole. David stayed down, talking with Seth about his wife to keep the trapped man awake. He then threaded a weighted rope more than 12m into the dark, which Seth caught and managed to secure.

Finally, after 12 hours in the crevice, Seth was on the move. Firefighters pulled him up slowly, a millimetre at a time.

71. What caught Seth's interest on 20 June 2015? (1m)

There was nothing else Luke could do. He stood there helplessly and his teeth were chattering in (16) erratic bursts. He was out of the cold water. Luke decided that he would not tell anyone that his friend, Tony, did not appear from the lake. He was too frightened. He ran back to his clothes that were left under the tree. He grabbed his jeans and let his shirt tumble to the ground (17) in a way that is intended, thinking he did not need it. Yet it was getting cold and he would need the shirt to keep him warm. His hand shook so violently that he could barely hold the jeans up to step into them. Evidently, Luke was too (18) agitated. A car came by and he did not tell the driver that he needed help.

He walked briskly and then ran towards home. As he ran, he was not (19) conscious of the traffic on the highway. After tripping and picking himself up, Luke looked down and realised that his big toe was bleeding. This further (20) worsened his misery but he was not going to stop. He had to move on to seek help.

Section D – Visual Text Comprehension (8 marks)
Study the following poster and then answer questions 21 to 28.

Visit Singapore's Zoo where animals inspire life

Key Attraction:Orang-utans

Do you know that these creatures are facing a fuzzy future?
Forest fires and logging contribute to the destruction of the orang-utans' natural homes. Poaching further reduces their low numbers. About 55 000 Bornean orang-utans and 7 500 Sumatran orang-utans are left.

Singapore Zoo has always been a strong advocate for the survival of orang-utans. We are proud to have bred a total of 37 orang-utans to date. Some have been sent to zoos in Malaysia, Sri Lanka, India, Vietnam, Japan, Australia and New Zealand as part of a worldwide exchange programme to facilitate the breeding of these highly endangered apes.

Free-ranging Habitat for Orang-utans

- Singapore Zoo is the first zoo in the world to feature a free-ranging area for the orang-utans.
- Two free-ranging areas, an island and a boardwalk complete with tall trees and thick vegetation, have been created for visitors to view these fascinating creatures.
- The absence of walls and the inclusion of the raised boardwalk allow guests to have a 360 degree view at an elevated angle.
- To simulate the natural rainforest environment, multi-tier climbing platforms have been constructed for these creatures to swing, climb and play around. These act as escape routes when fire breaks out.
- The habitat is also equipped with behavioural enrichment devices to ensure these smart apes stay intellectually and physically engaged every day.

Hang around for more

- Our award-winning Jungle Breakfast with Wildlife programme is a perfect opportunity for you to get to know the orang-utans better.
- You can enjoy a scrumptious morning buffet spread and have your photograph taken with them.
- You can also witness the orang-utans ambling down the lowered logs from the various access points within the free-ranging area to enjoy their token feeding sessions.

Venue and time for the photo taking sessions with the orang-utans:

- Boardwalk free-ranging area at 9.00 a.m daily
- Island free-ranging area at 11.00 a.m. daily

(C) before	(F) in	(J) the	(M) with	(Q) who

When I was just a few months old, my parents realised that I might have a hearing problem as I did not react to sounds. They tried all sorts of things, even banging two frying pans together, to get me to respond (29) _____ to no avail. My parents were devastated (30)_____ the doctor examined me and confirmed that I had profound hearing loss. They were advised to put me (31) _____ a special school so I could learn to communicate. Therefore, I attended a special school (32)_____the hearing impaired when I was four years old. There I learned to use sign languages and had the opportunity to mix (33) _____ other hearing-impaired children.

However, my mother found it a bit hard to take in the sight (34)_____ all the hearing-impaired children interacting using the signs and gestures. So, my parents sent me to private speech therapy classes (35)_____ I learned to read lips and pronounce words. In 1989, my parents decided that I should go to a mainstream school to "lead a normal life". Although it would be a difficult transition for me, we still took (36)_____ risk.

The mainstream school's pace was faster and it was not always easy to pay attention, especially when the teacher had her back to the class (37) _____ writing on the board. Hence, my mother would call some of my classmates every day to check (38) _____ had been taught. We also did a lot of extra work together after

Section F – Editing for Spelling and Grammar (12 marks)

Each of the underlined words contains either a spelling or grammatical error. Write the correct word in each of the boxes.

A highlight of any trip to Eastern Turkey is the twin peaks of Mount Ararat (39) They have been mentioned in legends since tilne began, most noteably as the supposed resting place of Noah's Ark. For many years, permission to climb Mount Ararat was (40) refused because of securerity concerns, although this fantastic summit is back on the (41) trekking map, but with some restricted. Permit and guide are mendetory and you will (42) need to apply at least 45 days of advance. Several guides and hotel staff in Dogbayazit (43) claim we can get the permit in a few days. Do not beelive them. It is much safer to (44) follow official prosidure, even if it is extremely slow. (45)

Despite the difficulties and costs, climbing Mt Ararat is an interesting (46) expiriense. You will be rewarded with stupendous views but stunning landscapes. The (47) good period for climbing is from July to September. If climbing did not intdrest you, (48) you can also do daily treks around the mountain. However, you still need to seek (49) permission from the local police. (50)

Section I – Comprehension (20 marks)
Read the passage and answer questions 71 to 80.

Growing up in Singapore in the 1940s, amid the deprivation of food and uncertainty brought about by the war, the idea of keeping a dog was never a consideration. So, when my daughter, then six years old, asked me if we could have a dog when we moved to New York, the answer was no. I knew that she would be tired of the animal soon and that I would be responsible for looking after it. As this was not a reason which could resonate with a six year old, I had to refuse on the ground that the streets of New York were too dangerous for a child her age to walk a dog.

When we returned to Singapore, this reason was no longer credible. As such, there was a half-hearted agreement to look for a suitable Labrador retriever. One day, after lunch in Upper Thomson Road, we made a detour to a pet shop nearby. There was no intention to buy anything. It was an attempt to mollify a young girl and to put off to a later date any idea of buying a dog.

Needless to say, it did not work out as I had planned. After several minutes of looking around, we came across a rascally little collie that would not stop licking and nibbling our fingers. We fell in love with him instantly. Penny, my wife, like all women, was more firm. She came up with all the practical reasons. A collie, with its long and thick mane, would be unsuitable in Singapore's hot weather. It was one against three and before we knew it, I was at the counter paying for the puppy and all the things that were apparently needed to look after it.

Back home, the work of raising a puppy began in earnest. First, we had to come up with a name for it and it turned out to be more difficult than I had anticipated. Common names were not acceptable to my daughter. She eventually came up with "Shakespeare", a name which would amuse strangers wherever we went. There was much to learn about raising a puppy. In the first few weeks, we tried to house-train him, that is, training our pet not to make the house dirty with its urine and faeces but without much success. Soon, the house became an unsightly minefield of dog poo.

Then, there were the crazy antics of this little fur ball. He would dash around blindly and without any real aim until stopped by some immovable object. Once, he ran into the glass sliding door and we discovered that dogs, too, have a set of milk teeth. Two of these fell off much to our distress and the vet had to be woken up close to midnight.

Shakespeare was one of the most gentle, friendly and attentive dogs around. When we had visitors to stay over, he would put his head on their lap and look up longingly, imploring them to play with him once he got used to them. Over the years, his gentle nature had convinced many friends to have a pet. He was attentive to people and could make them feel welcome. Family members, in particular, had been greeted with a long spell of barking each time they visited us after an absence of several years.

All these years, Shakespeare had been a constant and faithful companion to me. I hardly had any complaint about my health largely due to the long walks which we took daily without fail.

A fierce wave of thunder rolled by and the two children, Kwai and Dawan, huddled closer together, under the umbrella. Then Dawan turned to her brother and asked, haltingly, (16) "Are...Are...Are you sure now, Kwai? I am not forcing you to do this?"

Kwai glanced at his sister's small face. He knew that his sister had not been sleeping well and was tired. Despite the orange glow that the umbrella cast on her, Dawan looked drained, (17) with her lips drawn in a taut line, she looked as if she was bracing herself for a sudden slap. Kwai reached out impulsively and gently brushed a wisp of damp hair away from her cheek. "Yes, Sister," he answered solemnly, (18) without a smile on his face.

By the time they had reached the house, the rain got smaller (19) and only the sudden shuddering of leafy trees scattered some wayward raindrops down onto them. Dawan noticed their grandmother first. She lifted up her bony arm and beckoned for (20) the children to join her. Dawan steered Kwai away from the steps and to the shelter under the house.

FREE BOOK!
*For successful registrants

Interested to know the key areas of your pet's health that you should take note of? Get this book titled 'Pets for Life' for free! Here is an excerpt of some of the key areas that are covered in the book.

Behaviour Management

Pets cannot talk to you so their behaviour is their way of telling you if they are happy or sad! Sometimes, pets' behaviour can be annoying or even worrying! However, it is important for pet owners to realise that their pets' bad and quirky habits are not always a part of their personality. Their behaviour is affected by these factors: nutrition, stress, illness and genetic issues.

Nutrition and Weight

Good nutrition is vital to your pets' health. It improves their longevity and quality of life! Pets' diet depends on their size, breed, age, activity, stress level and medical history. Obesity or being underweight usually leads to poor health and a shorter lifespan. They may also suffer from chronic diseases!

Dental Health

Protecting your pet's teeth and gums is essential. Prevention of dental diseases is achieved by paying close attention to your pet's diet, regular brushing with pet toothpaste and toothbrushes and rinsing with special gels. As with human teeth, dental disease is caused when residual food, bacteria and calcium deposits form plaque and tartar on your pet's teeth. Failure to address these problems may result in bacteria carried into your pet's bloodstream, causing severe, long-term oral health issues that are sometimes fatal.

Section I – Comprehension Open-ended (20 marks)
Read this passage and answer questions 71 to 80.

The ship slowly moved away from the dock. Her crew worked busily while the passengers stood on the decks, some looking out at the sea and others waving to their families and friends. Apart from the crew, I was the only one who had no friends or relatives with me or to see me off. In one pathetic move, I raised my hand to wave goodbye to Singapore.

The huge merchant vessel carried both cargo and passengers. It moved at about ten nautical miles per hour. Navigation was by landmarks and compass bearings, the stars in the night and sun positions in the day. The journey would take thirty-nine days with six stopovers between Singapore and Southampton.

The crew of about thirty consisted of the captain, deck officers, engineers, stewards, cooks and sailors. Everything in the ship was basic and functional including my third-class four-person cabin. All the cabins had an area of about fourteen square metres, a height of two metres and a small porthole for ventilation. I shared my cabin with an elderly Frenchman named Anton, a Portuguese priest and a quiescent young man of unknown nationality. There were not many variety of activities on board. The days I had on the ship were spent on eating, sleeping, reading, writing my diary and looking at the stars and the sea.

The first part of the journey was through the Straits of Malacca. The voyage should be smooth unless we had the misfortune to meet pirates that plied the route targeting Europe-bound ships. The passengers were given strict instructions to stay in the cabins if the ship were to slow down and a signal was sounded. The captain and his officers would handle the pirates and after a bit of delay, we would be on our way again. If the ship was robbed of some of its coal, we would have to stop over at Penang for bunkering and the trip would be extended by two days. Fortunately, we did not have such an encounter and headed for Colombo without any trouble.

For twelve days, we were blessed with fine weather and small storms that came and went quickly. Mother Nature displayed her full glory with sensational sunrises and sunsets, and beautiful rainbows that spanned the sky after showers. However, on the thirteenth day, the ship hit a tropical cyclone that threw it about ferociously. Gigantic waves behaved like whips rather than bodies of water. Things were crashing down, people were falling and every other person was throwing up. Anton, who was partially blind and deaf, clung tightly to me. He was shouting words that I did not understand and was yelling even louder thinking that I could not hear him.

After a while, the young man of unknown nationality told me the old man needed his medicine that could be found in a bag under the bunk bed. When Anton had his medicine, he seemed sedated and released his clasp on me. I stayed close to him in case he needed more help.

Twenty-four hours passed and the storm was still raging. None of the passengers ventured outside and the cabins were getting into anuninhabitable state. If one did not get nauseated from motion sickness, it would be from the foul smell of vomit. No food was served and nobody had the appetite anyway. I could not take it on the second day of the storm and I went to stand at the deck for some fresh air.

Interview with John Tan, a resident in Greendale Woods.

Describe your experience with dengue fever.

I remember waking up one morning with chills and I was feeling extremely weak. Within a day, I developed a low-grade fever. I started getting a headache, as well as aches and pains in my joints. I initially thought that I was just getting the flu. I took some medication and thought that I would feel better soon.

However, by the third day, I was confined to my bed and my fever went up to 42 degrees. My family immediately sent me to the hospital. There, the doctors connected me to a drip and ran some blood tests. I was then diagnosed with dengue. That took me by surprise. I had been bitten by the dreaded Aedes mosquito!

The stay in the hospital was agonising. There was no specific treatment for dengue. Your body's own immune system has to overcome the virus. As I was lying on the hospital bed, I could not help but think about my unhealthy lifestyle. How I wished I had built up my immune system by exercising and eating healthier food.

Without any medication to treat the virus, I could only endure the pain. The only medication given to me did not help at all. A rash soon developed. There were tiny red spots that sprouted all over my shoulders, chest and arms. I was scratching away. It was unbearable. I had no appetite as every time I ate, I vomited.

The fight against dengue lasted up to a week. During that long week, I read up on how dengue is spread and how to prevent the breeding of Aedes mosquitoes. When I could finally leave the hospital, I resolved to spread the awareness of dengue. Let us protect ourselves from dengue!

Read the passage below carefully and answer questions 75 to 84. (20m)

Mary kept tossing and turning in her sleeping bag. It was late in the night. It was so quiet in the country. Even the birds were asleep. She had been a school counsellor in the summer camp for a year now. She took care of young children who were as young as seven. That night, she was having a bad dream. In it, she was running desperately towards a river. She kept shouting, "Fire!"

Mary jolted awake. She realised that she had been shouting in her sleep. Suddenly, she smelled acrid smoke. Then she saw shadows dancing against the walls of the tent! She realised a fire had started while she was asleep. Mary jumped up and hurried to the opening in the tent. She peeked out. A tree was on fire! Fanned by the wind, the fire leaped up hungrily to devour everything in its path. It was going to spread to the tents very soon!

Time was of the essence so Mary pulled the four children instantly out of their sleeping bags. She led them out of the tent and to the centre of the campsite. "Fire! Fire!" she yelled, as loudly as she could. "Wake up! Get up!" After that, Mary ran back to her tent and grabbed all the sleeping bags she could carry. By then, everyone had emerged from their tents. Their faces were etched with confusion. Mary took the two youngest children by the hand and pulled them along. Everyone quickly but calmly followed her. They held on to each other, in solemn silence.

"Mary!" called the camp leader who was trailing behind all of them. "Put down those sleeping bags! You can run faster!" However, Mary held on to the sleeping bags. She kept moving speedily. She followed the path that meandered down the river. There was no time to explain. Mary pulled the children into the water. Then she got into it herself. She dragged the sleeping bags in. She pushed them under the water until they were soaked. Mary pointed to some trees near the river. She said, "Those trees will soon be on fire. The fire will jump over the river. When it does, we must keep our heads under the water. The children will not be able to do that for very long. We have to get under the wet sleeping bags! This way, we will not be seared by the heat. We will also not inhale the smoke!" The camp leader and the other counsellors understood immediately so they dashed back to the campsite to get more sleeping bags and then put them into the water. They waited in anticipation of the fire to reach the river.

Meanwhile, Mary reflected on the situation. Somehow she was not surprised that all the trees were on fire. It had been an extremely hot season. Everything in the forest was dry. Soon, they saw many animals racing to the river. Deer, rabbits and squirrels splashed into it. By then, the fire roared. The flames were coming fast and furious toward them. Mary and the camp leader grabbed the wet sleeping bags and pulled them over the children's heads. Mary called out, "Keep your mouth just above the water. Leave just enough room for you to breathe. No matter what happens, keep down!"

Mary looked up from under her bag. Everything around them was bright orange and red. The sleeping bags had to stay wet. Together with the camp leader and other counsellors, they made a final effort to splash water over all the sleeping bags. Feeling the terrible heat on their arms and hands, they quickly ducked under the bags.

It seemed like an eternity. Soon, the heat and smoke finally ended. Mary raised her head and looked around. To her relief, all the children had escaped unscathed! "Mary," the camp leader said, "You saved our lives! How did you know what to do?"

Mary smiled. "I went through the same situation in the forest when I was a child," she said.

BENEFITS OF REGULAR EXERCISING

1. Exercise Controls Weight

Exercise coupled with healthy eating can help prevent excess weight gain and maintain weight loss. When you engage in physical activity, you burn calories. The more intense the activity, the more calories you burn. You don't need to set aside a lot of time for exercise to reap weight-loss benefits. If you can't do an actual workout, get more active throughout the day in simple ways — by taking the stairs instead of the lift or by increasing the amount of time spent on household chores.

2. Exercise combats health conditions and diseases

Worried about heart disease? Hoping to prevent high blood pressure? No matter what your current weight is, being active boosts your immune system and improves your blood flow. In fact, regular physical activity can help you prevent or manage a wide range of health problems and concerns, including stroke, diabetes, certain types of cancer and arthritis.

3. Exercise improves mood

Need an emotional lift? Or need to take the edge off after a stressful day? A workout at the gym or a brisk 30-minute walk can help. Physical activity stimulates various brain chemicals that may leave you feeling happier and more relaxed. You may also feel better about your appearance and yourself when you exercise regularly, which can boost your confidence and improve your self-esteem.

4. Exercise can be fun

Exercise can be a fun way to spend some time. It gives you a chance to unwind, enjoy the outdoors or simply engage in activities that make you happy. Engaging in physical activities can also help you connect with family or friends in a fun social setting. So, take a dance class, shoot some hoops or join a soccer team. Find a physical activity you enjoy, and just do it. If you get bored, try something new.

Read this passage and answer questions 71 to 80. (20m)

My parents migrated from America to Africa and I spent my growing years in Africa. I often accompanied Mother, a doctor, on her rounds. We went in a car that was outfitted to contain a medical chest filled with equipment. In this mobile clinic, we travelled to the nearby villages around the South African town that we lived in. Vaccination programmes against the local common diseases were part of our routine.

I helped with the oral vaccine for children. Each child would line up in front of me for a sugar lump coated with the vaccine. Then I would call for 'tongues out' to make sure that the children had all swallowed the vaccine. My biggest problem, however, was preventing the children from lining up again to get a second sweet treat.

As I grew older, wars erupted among the different countries in Africa. To escape, I left for America and worked at a newspaper as a reporter. Years later, the newspaper assigned me to South Africa to report on the local wars. By then, the South African town I had grown up in was cordoned off from foreign reporters. I pretended to be part of the local government officials who were touring the town and managed to slip in unnoticed into my childhood town. I wandered off from the group and drove off to the villages where I had helped Mother with her vaccination programmes.

Soon, I stopped at a trading store. Keen to obtain a story for my newspaper, I asked the storekeeper if he ever saw rebel soldiers in the village. His wide smile quickly vanished. From the farthest corner of the store, I heard metallic chinking. In the corner, six men posed menacingly. I had the answer that I wanted. One of them gestured to me and said, "You are coming with us back to our base."

After half a day, the soldiers' English speaker left us and conversation stopped. My captors were rather polite as I had been cooperative from the very beginning. I could guess from their gesturing that the stories about me became more and more embellished as we journeyed to the base camp. I had resisted. I was armed. I was a spy.

We finally reached their base on the second day. I was presented to the camp commander. Until then, I had not understood the languages they were speaking. When the commander gave his orders, it was in the familiar African dialect that I had grown up with. Hesitantly, I greeted him in what I could remember of the dialect.

He was amazed and asked me where I had learnt the dialect. I told him I had grown up around that area. He asked me again for my name and I told him, "Peter Godwin".

"Was your mother Dr Godwin, the doctor who vaccinated the villagers here for free?" he asked and I nodded. Smiling, he pulled up his sleeve and showed me a small vaccination scar on his shoulder. "And you were the one who gave me the sugar lump!" he exclaimed. Shaking my hands enthusiastically, he ordered his soldiers to immediately release me and to take me back to the trading store.

At the trading store, I was returned the things that had been confiscated. Before I left, my four companions insisted on a formal photograph. I still have the photograph— an evidence that good deed pays off.

The following is the winning story from last year's competition.

Every morning, Sandy baked bread for her family. For the past three years, she would place a loaf on her window sill for the less fortunate. To keep the birds and other animals away, she would put a food cover over the bread. For the first two years, the bread was taken by various people whom she never saw again.

In the past one year, a dishevelled-looking beggar would come and take away the bread. Without fail, he would mutter, "The evil you do remains with you. The good you do, comes back to you!"

At first, the man caught Sandy's attention as he had a bent back. Gradually, Sandy felt irritated by the beggar's ingratitude and decided to add laxatives to the extra bread she always prepared. As she was about to put it on the window sill, Sandy was overcome by guilt and decided to prepare a fresh loaf.

That evening, there was a knock on the door. As she opened it, Sandy was shocked to see her son who had gone away for six months to fight in a war. He was starved and weak. When he saw his mother, he said, "While I was but a distance away, I was so famished that I collapsed. I would have died, but just then, an old hunchback was kind enough to give me a whole loaf of bread."

As Sandy heard those words, her face turned white. She thanked the heavens that she had thrown away the laxative-laden bread. It was then that she realized the significance of the words, "The evil you do remains with you. The good you do, comes back to you!"

On 1 May 2016, a wildfire began southwest of Fort McMurray, a city in Canada. _____ (29) wildfire, named WF09, was first spotted by some firefighters in the afternoon and _____ (30) reported it just after 4 p.m.

To an amateur, nothing _____ (31) WF09 seemed dangerous – it seemed to be an ordinary forest fire that could be easily contained. However, it was already out of control and wildfire officials _____ (32) were on site were starting to get worried. All the conditions for a catastrophic wildfire _____ (33) present: hot dry weather, high winds and low humidity. Moreover, the wildfire was set within a dense forest _____ (34) easily caught fire. WF09 was also unsettling because of its proximity to the city and it _____ (35) already proven itself to be difficult to put out. When the next fire, named WF10, flared up later in the same forest, it was extinguished quickly, _____ (36) WF09 persisted.

By 5 a.m. on 2 May, eighty firefighters were fighting WF09 which had spread across 600 hectares by then. Some were attacking it from the air _____ (37) water bombers and helicopters while others attacked it on the ground. Yet by 5 p.m., the fire had more than doubled _____ (38) size to 1,285 hectares. Three hours later, it doubled again.

Read this passage and answer questions 71 to 80. (20m)

A chorus of urgent braying pierced through the air. Bertie sat up in bed. He jumped out of his bed and ran to the window. A herd of zebras was galloping noisily away from the waterhole, trailed closely by a couple of hyenas. Then he saw three more hyenas, standing stock still, eyes fixed on something at the waterhole. It was only then that Bertie saw the lion cub. It was covered in mud, with its back to the waterhole and it was waving a pathetic paw at the hyenas which were beginning to surround it. The lion cub had nowhere to run to and the hyenas were moving nearer.

Bertie ran to fetch his father, but remembered that he was still helping out at Uncle James' farm. He turned and was downstairs in a flash, leaping off the porch and racing across the compound. He charged down the hill towards the waterhole, yelling and screaming and waving his arms wildly. Startled at this sudden intrusion, the hyenas turned to look at Bertie. Bertie hurled some pebbles at them and they ran off, but stopped some distance away. Then, Bertie was at the waterhole, standing between the lion cub and the hyenas, shouting at them to go away. They stood and watched, uncertain but determined. Soon, they began to surround Bertie and the lion cub, sidling closer and closer.

That was when the shot rang out. The hyenas bolted into the long grass and were gone. When Bertie turned round, he saw his mother with a rifle in hand. He had never seen her hold a gun before. Between them, they gathered up the mud-matted cub easily and took it home. It was too weak to struggle. As soon as they had given it some warm milk, they dunked it in the bath. As the mud came off, Bertie saw it was white underneath.

"You see!" he cried triumphantly. "You refused to believe me when I told you. I really saw a rare white lion cub two days ago!" His mother still could not bring herself to believe him. Five baths later, she had to.

They sat the cub down by the stove in a washing basket and fed it all the milk it could drink. Then, it lay down and fell into an exhausted sleep. It's was still asleep when Bertie's father returned home in the afternoon from Uncle James'. They told him how it had all happened.

"Please, Father. I want to keep it," Bertie said.

"And so do I," said his mother. "We both do." She spoke in firm voice. Bertie's father did not seem to know how to reply. He just said, "We'll talk about it later," and then he walked out.

His parents did talk about it later. They discussed it when Bertie was supposed to be in bed. However, Bertie had woken up to feed the cub and heard them talking. He stood unnoticed by the door, eavesdropping on their conversation.

"It will grow up, you know" his father was saying, as he paced up and down. "You can't keep a grown lion, you know that. Even if you can tame its wild animal instinct, it will get too strong for you to manage and that's dangerous."

"Well, you know we can't just throw it out to the hyenas," argued his mother. "Besides, it will be a pet for Bertie to play with for a while." Then she added, "After all, he doesn't have any brothers and sisters."

At this, Bertie's father went over to her and kissed her gently on the forehead. "All right, then," he said. "You can keep your lion."

Courage is not the absence of fear, but the overcoming of it. When we think of the term 'Courage', our minds are naturally filled with images of a cool, muscular hero saving the day, overcoming the most dangerous obstacles that come his way.

Incredible! One would think. Most Hollywood action-packed movies (16) depict courage of a hero this way and it is no wonder many people believe that heroes do not (17) exist in the real world. The fact is one does not need to do all those dangerous and mind-blowing stunts to fit the term 'Courageous'.

As stated earlier, courage is the overcoming of fear, not the absence of it. Having fear in our heart does not make us cowardly, but the (18) triumph over it will render us courageous. For example, to (19) stand up against the peer pressure to smoke, take drugs or steal is a form of courage.

When we overcome the fears within ourselves, we are releasing a (20) potential power to conquer the obstacles and challenges ahead. Anyone can be courageous when we overcome the fears we have in our lives!

Read the passage below and answer questions 71 to 80. (20 marks)

I was grocery shopping recently in my hometown when I heard a young voice boom from across the aisle. "Mom, come here, you've got to see this! There's this lady here my size!" The mortified mother rushed to a boy she called Mikey, who looked to be about seven. Then she turned to me to apologize. "Oh, I'm so sorry."

I smiled and told her, "It's okay." Then I looked at her wide-eyed son and said, "Hi, Mikey, I'm Darryl Kramer. How are you?" He studied me from head to toe, and asked, "Why are you so little?"

"It's the way God made me," I said. "Some people are little. Some are tall. I'm just not going to grow any bigger."

My life as a little person is filled with stories like these. I enjoy talking to children and explaining why I look different from their parents. It has taken many years of developing my confidence to be able to do that. And it's the children's questions that make my life special. My hope is that in taking time with them, I will encourage them to accept their peers, whatever size and shape they come in, and treat them with respect.

It takes only one glance to see my uniqueness. I stand three feet, nine inches tall. I am an achondroplasia dwarf, which is a person having very short limbs. Not knowing a lot about dwarfism, my mother's main concern was my health. Our family doctor put her mind at ease when he told her he felt I would not have any major medical concerns when I was a baby. He was right.

When I was growing up, my parents encouraged me to do all the things the kids around me did. So when my neighbours got two-wheel bikes, I got a two-wheel bike. When they roller-skated, I roller-skated. Our neighbours looked out for me and treated me as one of them.

What I lacked in height, I made up for in personality – my ability to laugh, even at myself. For example, a few years ago, I was reaching into the washing machine at my parents' house to grab the wet clothes. I fell all the way in and yelled for Mother, who was sitting nearby reading a newspaper. Watching feet flying everywhere, she chuckled and said, "I should leave you in there." I laughed with her.

I'm 47 now, and the stares have not diminished as I've grown older. People ask my friends if I live in a dollhouse. They look in disbelief when they see me get out of my car on the driver's side. During those times, I try to keep a good attitude. When people are rude, I remind myself, "Look what else I have -- a great family, nice friends. That's all I need."

My Enchanting Time in Korea

Why should you visit Korea? The following brief written by Leon Khoo, a celebrity traveller, tells us why Seoul is his favourite city.

South Korea is a country often known for its separation from the north. It is however not its history of destruction that defines this country. It is its wonderful mix of modernisation and long-valued tradition resulting in a diverse and dynamic culture which people remember it for. To experience a cutting-edge holiday, look no further than capital city, Seoul. Filled with towers of commercial buildings, it positions itself as the world's leading megacity. Such an impressive skyline stands in stark contrast to the old majestic palaces in the ancient city Gyeongju, a throwback to the days of Emperors.

Seoul is the second largest metropolitan area in the world after Tokyo. Almost half of South Korea's population live in Seoul Greater Metropolitan Area, making it a central financial and cultural hub, attractive to the locals as well as foreigners. 25 million people live in this city. Seoul is a feast for the senses – the ears are set ringing with trendy K-pop music and the taste buds tingling by spicy barbecued beef or wriggling octopus tentacles. Strolling along the streets means feasting on street snacks non-stop. The sheer number of push cart stalls is mind-boggling, and I found myself eating along the way, every day. Come and experience Korea for yourself!

Read the passage below and answer questions 71 to 80. (20 marks)

Its heavily muscled jaw opened across the top of Andrew's shoe in a ferocious grip. The fangs had pierced the leather and become embedded just in front of the anklebone. Scorched with pain, the boy stared down at the snake as it seemed to gnaw slowly and deliberately on his foot. Andrew told himself not to panic. His parents had taught him that the faster a person's blood flows, the faster a rattler's poison reaches the heart. Andrew felt weak all over and everything started to get fuzzy. The pain that he felt was overwhelming. The rattlesnake's fangs had injected a massive amount of venom directly into a vein. The poison was racing through his body, launching multiple attacks upon his respiratory system and his heart.

James Porter was pruning the bushes in his front yard when his oldest son, Bruno, screamed for help. James raced for the house and the only words Andrew uttered calmly and peacefully from his lips ~~was~~ were, "I've been bitten by a rattlesnake." Then, he fell to the floor unconscious, violent cramps racking through his body. Andrew's mother, Sarah, tore at his shoes and uncovered an ugly, purple mound that looked to be a grapefruit-size of on his right foot and they knew that something should be done to stop the venom from spreading. They quickly twisted a tight bandage around Andrew's leg.

They knew they needed help and ran to their pickup truck and took off at top speed for the health clinic. James drove fast, hogging the road, passing cars, racing for his son's life. Suddenly, the truck began to sputter. A gauge showed that the motor was overheating. Then the engine cut off completely, and the truck rolled to a stop, still on the road. James jumped out and frantically waved his arms. Drivers swerved around him. James ran back to the truck and took Andrew from Sarah's arms. He carried him in the middle of the road and held the boy's limp, almost motionless body up in the air like a flag. One car slammed on its brakes. The driver, a Haitian farm worker, could not communicate in English but he understood. He urged Sarah and her unconscious son into his car and followed Sarah's hand-motion directions to the clinic.

Synopsis

Bear and Chicken are back! They are getting ready to go to a new school. But moving from their familiar school to a new one is tough. So, Bear and Chicken decide to join the Circus together instead. Wouldn't it be fun to be the circus clown, acrobat or even the lion tamer?

What follows is a charming discovery that not all lessons in life are learnt in a classroom and perhaps the circus isn't all fun and games after all.

This play illustrates how sometimes our fears can be blown out of proportion. However with a good friend at your side, you can overcome a potentially daunting situation like the first day of school. Perhaps school can even be fun!

Bear and Chicken Get Ready for School is the third episode of a highly successful original series that began with When I Grow Up and Bear and Chicken Go Camping. You'll get to meet the lovable bear in his circus costume, and Chicken who is all set for school!

Singapore Repertory Company (SRC) is a non-profit organisation. We need your help to mount our shows for every season. Since 1983, SRC has been committed to producing world-class theatre that will be exciting, inspiring and entertaining.

At SRC, we offer many sponsorship opportunities for corporations.

Read the passage below and answer questions 71 to 80. (20 marks)

We were ten teenagers on a month-long service mission to repair the homes of the underprivileged living in the Himalayan mountains. The area appeared to contradict itself, for it held so much magnificence yet housed so much poverty. We saw ourselves as being able to serve those in need but not benefiting from it.

We drove our green van through the mountainous landscape and pulled up alongside Raj's house. As the doors opened, we poured out with hammers in hand, and prepared to start our usual routine. We interchanged jobs as we basked in the sun. Some of us painted the windows while others stained the deck or mended the roof. We passed the time with private jokes and songs. Despite the monotony of painting window after window, we truly enjoyed ourselves. All the while, Raj, a retiree, sat in a lawn chair observing us with a cane in hand to support himself in case he needed to get up.

As the clock neared noon, we took our lunch break in the shelter of a small tree in Raj's front yard. Dave, our facilitator, planted Raj's chair beside us and announced that since he was to assist in any way possible, Raj would lead us in a before-meal prayer. He saw our weary faces and heard the growls from our stomachs. He kept it short and we soon began digging into our food.

"Let me tell you a story...," he then started. From the pit of his modest heart, he began to unravel his eighty-some-odd years for us. He was a school teacher who had a dog named Spikey. He told of old hunting expeditions in the mountains where his life was almost lost to a bear. He also shared about the killing of rattlesnakes.

Then his eyes just wandered off as if he was no longer talking for our benefit, but more for his own. He described that day his dog died, as heavy tears rolled down his weathered cheeks and he clasped the end of his cane. He recalled her faithfulness to the end as with one last thump of the tail, looking up at him, Spikey passed on. He remembered his wife gazing up at him much the same way seconds before her death.

He always tenderly called his wife 'Mama'. He told of how she had always stayed up until the wee hours of the morning to bake bread for him while he, often exhausted from a long day of teaching or hunting, would retire to bed. "Why hadn't I taken the extra time to stay up with her?" he said in a distant voice as his eyes gazed beyond us. "Why couldn't I do so? Why?"

I remembered how intensely those words rang inside me. Here was a man brimming with wisdom and reflections on his life, telling me to make the most of mine, to take the extra time with those I love. I was motivated. I was mesmerised by this amazing old man whom I had thought I was helping. Raj's house was not a workplace at all. It was a classroom.

Egypt is considered the oldest travel destination on earth. It was on a whim (16) that I had decided to visit it last year. To someone who had been living a city life in a pragmatic (17) Singapore, Egypt was a faraway, mystical place I itched (18) to explore.

Once I landed on the Giza plateau, I was greeted by the most astounding sights created by the hands of men. Browsing through pictures of pyramids and burying my nose into books about pyramids had not prepared me for the sight of the imposing (19) structures that confronted me as I stood in the middle of the plateau. Interestingly, the primary (20) purpose of these triangular wonders was not so much to flaunt any architectural prowess as it was to serve a sacred end. The Great Pyramids were actually tombs built for the pharaohs and the queens.

By the time I ended my visit there, I had only one word to describe my experience. It was magicall

Dogs and cats make babies healthier and families are encouraged to keep pets.

What do dogs or cats have to do (29) _____ your baby's risk of catching a cold? According to the latest research, "pet immunity" took (30) _____ a new meaning as having pets may actually help to lower your child's risk of coughs and sniffles during the first year of life.

Researchers say that babies (31) _____ grow up in homes with a pet are less likely to get sick (32) _____ children who live pet-free. The results strengthened the idea that keeping babies in overly sanitized homes are not good (33) _____ their health. Previous research has linked the presence of pets with a lower risk of allergies (34)_____ babies.

A recent study in mice found that exposure to household dust from homes with a dog prevented infection with a common respiratory virus that causes childhood asthma. So, how do pets protect babies against these diseases? It (35) _____ not entirely clear, but researchers think that coming (36) _____ contact with the microbes that pets carry into the home from outdoors, could prime babies' still-developing immune systems and train them early to fend (37) _____ attacks from common allergens and bugs.

The fact that kids in pet-friendly homes get (38) _____ with fewer antibiotics to treat respiratory infections is encouraging. This allows them to depend less on medication.

Section G :Comprehension Cloze (15 x 1 mark)
Fill in each blank with a suitable word.

Salads of the future may still be served in bowls, but their ingredients might be grown in skyscrapers. That is the hope of scientists and architects who are _____(51)_____ up with a unique strategy to feed a growing _____(52)_____ with limited farmland.

One solution is to grow everything _____(53)_____ salad greens to staple grains all year in high-rise buildings located in the heart _____(54)_____ cities. This form of farming, known as vertical farming, could put food within easy _____(55)_____ for billions of people. It will also help to _____(56)_____ carbon emission as fewer ships will be required to transport crops across continents and oceans.

However, at present, vertical farming is just _____(57)_____ idea. One challenge is how to stack the greenhouses so that layers of crops get enough light to be grown in a vertical structure. Experts say that this concept is too expensive to implement and would be an enormous _____(58)_____ of electricity. We will need gigawatts of power just to grow crops indoors, compared to free sunlight outside. Indoor _____(59)_____ is not as intense as the full sunlight needed to grow crops. Using indoor lighting to grow crops _____(60)_____ different from lighting up a room.

On the other hand, some experts are confident that vertical farming can be carried _____(61)_____. They argued that architects are already _____(62)_____ buildings to harvest the maximum amount of natural light.

Another consideration is creating a vertical farm complex that would benefit many people. An ideal farm complex would be 12 storeys _____(63)_____ and would mix homes with gardens that produce food for the neighbourhood. The residents can tend and harvest the crops for their own consumption or _____(64)_____ the produce at a local market. Alternatively, these _____(65)_____ can sell their home-farms.

Perhaps another solution is to eat less meat to free up land, currently grazed by livestock, to be sown with food crops.

Section I : Comprehension (Open-ended) 20 marks

Read this passage carefully and answer the questions 71 to 80.

The snake-man was small and very old, probably over seventy. He wore leather boots made of thick cowhide and he had long leather gloves on his hands. He was just a bit too far away from the snake to reach it with the end of his pole.

He waited, staring at the snake and it stared back at him with two small malevolent black eyes. Then the snake-man started speaking to the snake "Come along, you pretty," he whispered in a soft wheedling voice. "That's a good boy. Nobody is going to hurt you. Just lie still and relax." He walked nearer to the snake, holding the pole out in front of him.

What the snake did next was so fast, like the flick of a camera shutter. There was a green flash as the snake darted forward at least three metres and struck at the snake-man's leg. I heard the snake's head strike against the thick cowhide boot with a sharp little crack and then at once, the head was back in the same deadly backward-curving position, ready to strike again.

I could see a thin dark trickle of venom running down the snake-man's right boot where the snake had struck. "That's a good boy," the snake-man said softly. This time I thought I could hear fear in his voice. He simply had no choice but to persist. Mambas are widely considered the world's deadliest snakes. A mamba can move faster than a galloping horse. How could he run that fast? As he was speaking, he was slowly lowering the end of the pole until the forked prongs were about thirty centimetres above the middle of the snake's body.

Then without warning, the rubber prongs came down right across the snake's body, about midway along its length and pinned it to the floor. All I could see was a green blur as the snake thrashed around furiously in an effort to free itself. However, the snake-man kept up the pressure on the prongs and the snake was trapped.

Holding the very end of the pole, the snake-man began to work his way round the room until he was at the tail end of the snake. Then, in spite of the flailing and thrashing, he started pushing the prongs forward along the snake's body toward the head. Very, very slowly he did it, pushing the rubber prongs forward over the snake's flailing body, keeping the snake pinned down all the time and pushing the long wooden rod forward millimetre by millimetre. It was a fascinating and frightening thing to watch. The snake's body was thumping against the coconut matting, making a noise that if you had been upstairs, you might have thought two big men were wrestling on the floor.

Then at last the prongs were right behind the head itself, pinning it down and at that point the snake-man reached forward with one gloved hand and grasped the snake very securely by the neck. He threw away the pole. He took the sack off the shoulder with his free hand. He lifted the deadly green snake and pushed the head into the sack. The sack started jumping about as though there were fifty angry rats inside it but the snake-man was now totally collected. He held the sack casually in one hand and beamed with pride.

Leo De Watts struck upon the idea of selling bottled, British countryside air to Chinese consumers. The idea came to this entrepreneur when he saw a news footage (16) of pollution and smog in Chinese cities. De Watt has since started a thriving (17) business from selling his novel product of clean bottled air to China.

De Watt debuted (18) his company last year in the somewhat imaginatively named industry of "air farming". His team "harvests" air in bottles from various locations across Britain and ships it to China. Even though the air is cheap to collect, De Watts puts a hefty (19) price on his products. Chinese lovers of British air have to pay around $115 for a 580ml bottle.

He said his Chinese customers can be quite fastidious (20) about exactly what kind of air they buy. He explained in a promotional video, "Quite often a lot of our orders are bespoke. We have clients who request very particular circumstances for their air. Sometimes we'll be at the top of the mountain, and other times at the bottom of a valley."

WRITERS' ACADEMY WRITING COMPETITION 2016

Writers' Academy has been shining a spotlight on up and coming young writers from 10 to 12 years old through its Biennial Writing Competition for more than 10 years.

Unlike the traditional pen-and-paper writing competition held in previous years, Writers' Academy Writing Competition 2016 took a very unique format of getting young children to author and publish their stories into e-books. Participants had to use multimedia resources to present the story in an engaging and interactive way. Shortlisted entries were published on our website so that they could be read and voted for.

This year's writing competition met with a record response. It was the first time more than 500 entries were submitted! We are very pleased to announce the results of the Writers' Academy Writing Competition 2016. Congratulations to all the prize winners!

JUDGING

It took nine judges from Authors' Club almost three months to decide on the winners. They were looking for writers who capture the readers' attention, whose ideas or perspectives are unique as well as those with precise and evocative word choice.

WINNERS

AWARD	NAME	Age	Title

GOLD Winner : Namita Kaur, 12 years old

The judges unanimously agree that Namita has written one of the funniest crime novels they have ever read. They find it hard to find fault with a book so well-written and engaging. Definitely a briskly paced page-turner from the start to finish!

SILVER Winner: Gavin Lee, 12 years old

Indeed the pen is mightier than the sword. Gavin writes powerfully from the point of view of an anxious and ambitious teenager trying to cope with the intersection between his view of himself and his mother's view of him. His vocabulary and phrasing successfully reflect the tensions in his world.

BRONZE Winner : Farisha Ishak, 10 years old

Farisha has successfully chronicled the adventures of Steffi, a wise-cracking primary school student. There are laughs on every page and the pictures only add to the humour. The journal format makes it an easy read for children of all ages.

Section I : Comprehension (Open-ended) 20 marks
Read this passage carefully and answer the questions 71 to 80.

Every year during graduation, a beautiful gold and green jacket was awarded to the class valedictorian. Since I had maintained the highest grades for eight years consecutively, I looked forward to owning that jacket. Furthermore, my school uniforms had always been hand-me-downs as my family could barely make ends meet, so this jacket meant a lot to me.

One day, Mr. Schmidt, my History teacher and Mr. Boone, my Math teacher, were having a squabble. I did not mean to eavesdrop, but I was appalled to hear my name.

"I will not fabricate records! I don't care who her father is. Joanne's grades don't even begin to compare to Martha's," Mr. Schmidt said furiously. Mr. Boone replied, Look, Joanne's father is on the School Board so the principal would like us to put in a good word for her." Shaking, not wanting to hear more, I fled in tears.

The next day I was called into the principal's office. He looked uncomfortable and avoided my eyes as he spoke, "Martha, there's been a change in policy regarding the scholarship jacket." He fidgeted with the papers on his desk as he continued, "It has always been free but this year the Board has decided to charge fifteen dollars for the jacket." Staring at him in disbelief, I was shocked at his lame excuse. "If you are unable to pay for the jacket, it will be given to the next nominee." I did not need to ask who that would be. Mustering all my dignity, I answered calmly, "I'll speak to my grandfather, Sir, and let you know tomorrow."

I held back my tears and waited till I was a safe distance away from the principal's office before I broke down and cried. When I got home and saw Grandfather, I asked nervously, "Grandpa, this year the principal said the scholarship jacket is going to cost fifteen dollars, and I have to pay up tomorrow." Then, I waited, desperately hoping Grandfather would agree to give me the money. After a pause, he spoke, "If you have to pay for it, it's not a scholarship jacket, is it? Tell your principal I will not pay for it." He continued, "What does a scholarship jacket mean?" I answered quickly, "It means you've earned it by having the highest grades for eight years." Too late, I finally understood the significance of my words.

The next day, the principal called me into his office for an answer. I answered, "He said to tell you he would not pay the fifteen dollars." I stood up to leave when he stopped me, "Martha—wait! We'll make an exception for you this time." I could hardly believe what I heard.

I rushed home to break the good news to Grandfather who said nothing except to give me a pat on the shoulder and a smile.

Mr and Mrs Alfred Tan

I find that vendors at computer fairs have to lower their prices further to attract more buyers. I was very happy to find great bargains for the items I bought at the Techfest! I know I do not have to worry about maintenance for my purchases since the vendors all have established stores or online sites, selling such products!

Every first Friday evening of the month, a special group of residents (39) [ ] patrol the neighbourhood. They look out for people behaving suspishiously, (40) [ ] people who are unruly, as well as those engage in other unsafe practices.

As the Citizens on Patrol (COP) teams go about their patrols, it is clear (41) [ ] that other residents welcome their prezense. Every few metres or so, they (42) [ ] are greeting by the residents or shopkeepers who stop them for brief chats. (43) [ ] (44) [ ] Each team consists by four or five COP members and is accomperneed by Foreign Worker Ambassadors (FWA) and Police Officers. The ambassadors (45) [ ] help to comunikate with the foreign workers since they can speak their language.

(46) [ ]

Before the COP teams started our patrols in 2011, strangers could often (47) [ ] be seen loyterring around the estate. Some would even get drank and behave (48) [ ] in a rowdy manner. That made the residents feared for their own safety, (49) [ ] (50) [ ] espeshially when they return home late.

In Singapore, there is tension between residents who live next to nature reserves and parks, and long-tailed macaques. Residents are not fully prepared to live _____ (51) monkeys, making food available to them through unsecured rubbish dumps. Monkeys are quick to _____ (52) advantage of these resources and many residents are scared by their bold behaviour.

Conflict between monkeys and people _____ (53) common throughout Southeast Asia. This is _____ (54) long-tailed macaques naturally live on forest edges, placing them _____ (55) contact with human communities. In the case of a small island in Thailand, tourists occasionally _____ (56) the monkeys there. There is chaos as the monkeys climb over each other, trying to get a share of the food up for _____ (57). Soon, all the food is gone and the tourists make a hasty retreat, probably leaving with the same impression of monkeys that most people have – as scary food-crazed gremlins. It is _____ (58) the tide recedes and no tourists are around that the most amazing thing happens. The low _____ (59) reveals a buffet of oysters and other shellfish. The monkeys will use stones as hammers to _____ (60) open the seafood. Their behaviour shows that they are _____ (61) to adapt to the changes in their environment

There is much more to long-tailed macaques _____ (62) just the conflict they have with people. _____ (63) we label them as pests, we should remember that their behaviour is often a reflection of how we have behaved _____ (64) them. Read the passage below and answer questions 71 to 80. (20 marks)

When he was a little boy, his uncle called him 'Sparky'. He was named after a comic-strip horse named Spark Plug.

Sparky performed poorly academically. His record in sports was not any better either. Though he did manage to make the school's golf team, he promptly lost the only important match of the season. There was a consolation match which he lost too.

Throughout his youth, Sparky was socially awkward. It was not that the other students disliked him. It was just that no one really cared all that much. In fact, Sparky was astonished if a classmate ever spoke to him outside of school hours. Sparky was a loser. His classmates, even himself, knew it. As a result, he learnt to live with it. He made up his mind early that if things were meant to work out, they would. Otherwise he would be contented with what life had in store for him.

However, one thing was important to Sparky – drawing. He was proud of his artwork. No one else appreciated it. That did not matter to him. In his senior year of high school, he submitted some cartoons for the school's yearbook. The editors rejected his concept. Despite that, Sparky was convinced of his ability. He even decided to become an artist.

After completing high school, Sparky wrote in to Walt Disney Studios. They asked for samples of his artwork. In spite of his careful preparation, it too was rejected. That was one more confirmation that he was a loser.

Even with that setback, Sparky still did not give up. Instead, he decided to tell his life story in cartoons. The main character would be a little boy who symbolised the perpetual loser and chronic underachiever. Sparky's cartoon character went on to become a cultural phenomenon of sorts. People readily identified with this 'lovable loser'. He reminded people of the painful and embarrassing moments from their own past, of their pain and their shared humanity. The character - Charlie Brown - soon became famous worldwide. Sparky, the boy whose many failures never stopped him from trying, whose work was rejected repeatedly, is the highly successful cartoonist, Charles Schultz. His cartoon strip, 'Peanuts', continues to inspire books and T-shirts. His story reminds us that life somehow finds a way for all of us, even the losers.

Sparky's story reminds us of a very important principle in life. We all face difficulty and discouragement from time to time. We have a choice in how we handle them. If we are persistent, if we continue to develop the unique talents we have, who knows what can happen. We may end up with an insight and an ability to inspire that comes only through hardship. In the end, there are no 'losers'. Some winners just take longer to develop!

Archaeopteryx [pronounced as Ark-ee-op-tur-icks] is considered by many to be the first bird, being of about 150 million years of age. Many scientists belief that the group 'Aves', or the birds, evolved from dinosaurs, such as raptors. Never is this clearer than of the case of Archaeopteryx.

(39) [ ]

(40) [ ]

(41) [ ]

For now, Archaeopteryx is credited as being the erleeyest known true bird.

(42) [ ]

Yet, this strange animal still had many dinosaur-like feechures. Archaeopteryx had feathers, beak, and feet like those of modern birds. However, it also had

Read the passage below and answer questions 71 to 80. (20 marks)

When the family started out, the air was already warm and dust hung over the busy streets. Sadako ran ahead to the house of her best friend, Chizuko. The two had been friends since kindergarten. Sadako was sure they would always be as close as two pine needles on the same twig.

Chizuko waved and walked toward her. Sadako sighed. Sometimes she wished her friend would move a bit faster. "Don't be such a turtle!" she shouted. "Let's hurry so we won't miss anything."

"Sadako chan, go slowly in this heat," her mother called after her. But it was too late. The girls were already racing up the street.

Mrs Sasaki frowned "Sadako is always in such a hurry to be first that she never stops to listen," she said.

Mr Sasaki laughed and said, "Well, did you ever see her walk when she could run, hop or jump?" There was pride in his voice because Sadako was such a fast and strong runner.

At the entrance to the Peace Park people filed through the memorial building in silence. On the walls were photographs of the dead and dying in a ruined city. The atom bomb – The Thunderbolt – had turned Hiroshima into a desert.

Sadako did not want to look at the frightening pictures. She held tight to Chizuko's hand and walked quickly through the building.

"I remember the Thunderbolt," Sadako whispered to her friend. "There was the flash of a million suns. Then the heat prickled my eyes like needles."

"How can you possibly remember anything?" Chizuko exclaimed. "You were only a baby then."

"Well, I do!" Sadako said stubbornly.

After speeches by Buddhist priests and the mayor, hundreds of white doves were freed from their cages. They circled the twisted, scarred Atomic Dome. Sadako thought the doves looked like spirits of the dead flying into the freedom of the sky.

When the ceremonies were over, Sadako led the others straight to the old lady who sold cotton candy. It tasted even better than last year.

The day passed too quickly, as it always did. The best part, Sadako thought, was looking at all the things to buy and smelling the good food. There were stalls selling everything from bean cakes to chirping crickets. The worst part was seeing people with ugly whitish scars. The atom bomb had burned them so badly that they no longer looked human. If any of the bomb victims came near Sadako, she turned away quickly.

Excitement grew as the sun went down. When the last dazzling display of fireworks faded from the sky, the crowd carried the paper lanterns to the banks of the Ohta River.

Mr Sasaki carefully lit candles inside of six lanterns – one for each member of the family. The lanterns carried the names of relatives who had died because of the Thunderbolt. Sadako had written Oba chan's name on the side of her lantern. When the candles were burning brightly, the lanterns were launched on the Ohta River. They floated out to sea like a swarm of fireflies against the dark water.

Overview

Known for their distinctive red fur, Orang Utans are the largest arboreal mammal, spending most of their time in trees. Long, powerful arms and grasping hands and feet allow them to move through the branches. These great apes share 96.4% of our genes and are highly intelligent creatures.

The name 'Orang Utan' means 'man of the forest'. In the lowland forests in which they reside, they feast on wild fruits and slurp water from holes in trees. Adult male Orang Utans can weigh up to 200 pounds.

Endangered Species

The two species of Orang Utan, Bornean and Sumatran, differ little in appearance and behaviour although the Sumatran Orang Utans have longer facial hair. Both species have experienced sharp population declines and there are few left in the world.

Why They Matter

Orang Utans are 'gardeners' of the forest, playing a vital role in seed dispersal in their habitats. They live in tropical forests and prefer forests in river valleys and floodplains of their respective islands. Their extremely low reproductive rate makes their populations highly vulnerable. Females give birth to one infant at a time every 3 - 5 years.

Threats

Hunting and Illegal Wildlife Trade

Orang Utans are easy targets for hunters because they are large and slow targets. They are killed for food or in retaliation when they move into agricultural areas and destroy crops. This usually occurs when Orang Utans cannot find the food they need in the forest. Females are hunted most often. When caught with offspring, the young are often kept as pets.

Read the passage below and answer questions 71 to 80. (20 marks)

When I was growing up, my parents took teaching jobs in a remote town in Quezon Province, the Philippines, leaving me and my younger sister and two younger brothers in the care of my grandparents in the town of Sampaloc.

Nanay, as we called my grandmother, did not hug or kiss children. A woman with a sharp tongue and words that make the heart bleed, Nanay was a tyrant - but she was there. We saw our parents only a few times a year, but as early as I could remember, Nanay had always been a part of my life. I believed grandmothers lived forever.

Nanay taught me many lessons. Most importantly, she taught me that my happiness comes first. "At the end of your life, you do not want to regret living a life for others but not yourself," she would always say.

Still, she had her weaknesses. When we were little, she adopted orphaned cats that slept on the sofa with her. The cats defecated inside the house and it made the whole place stink, but Nanay did not have the heart to punish them.

It was a different story with her grandchildren. When we displeased her, she threatened to die and haunt us. My grandfather was a submissive, quiet man who never interferred when Nanay spewed the curses that would befall us if we did not behave. As a result, I never feared anything like ghosts or vampires because I lived with the 'Real Thing'; Nanay could terrorise both young children and old men.

When I was thirteen, Nanay sent me to Manila to attend high school, and I stayed there for university. I came back each summer, but after I got married the visits became less frequent. Soon all of her grandchildren had moved out. After my grandfather had died, Nanay was left on her own. In her letters to me, she wrote of how lonely she was, but I never made the effort to spend more time with her.

Nanay died last year after suffering a stroke. She was 83. After the funeral, I went to our old house and helped sort through her possessions. I came across an old set of white crocheted curtains that she had made. I had not seen them in years. It was delicate. As I admired the hard work in the pattern, I realised I could repair the piece – using the crochet skills Nanay had taught me – and turn it into a tablecloth

When I visited her grave, I was filled with sorrow as I reflected on all the birthdays I had allowed to pass. I thought about all the stories she never got a chance to tell me, about her life, about the girl she once had been. It occurred to me that perhaps she did not know how to tell me because I had never thought to ask.

When the crocheted curtain-turned-tablecloth is complete, I will try something else. Maybe I will cook sweetened sticky rice or make a patchwork blanket from scrap cloth. The way Nanay taught me, the way I remember. I was right all along. Grandmothers live forever. They are in their granddaughters' hearts.

Primary Secondary Tertiary Educators' Workshop Resources

SINGAPORE DISCOVERY CENTRE (SDC)

Educational Programmes

Play@SDC

Post-Exams Programme 13 Oct – 20 Nov

Our year-end post-exams programme takes students on an exciting journey where they will discover the unique traits that define Singapore as a nation over the years. Through a range of fun activities, students will be given opportunities to be inspired by the big achievements of our small country and to aspire to shape the future of Singapore.

This 3-hour customised programme will allow our students to visit and explore the special exhibits as well as participate in various Learn-Thru-Play stations.

To find out more, visit the SDC website.

For Students

PRIMARY	SECONDARY
Primary 1 to 6 pupils can learn about our Singapore story through our interactive and engaging programmes such as: • PLAY@SDC • Junior Lion Hearters • Social Studies Programme, • Assembly Roadshows • Discovery Races • National Education Ambassadors' programme, and more!	• Experience first-hand the concepts of Terrorism and Team Building through our Paintball programme! • Engage in friendly matches against your friends and learn the importance of working together as a team and defending your ground through various scenario-based games!

For Educators

EDUCATORS' WORKSHOP	RESOURCES
Teachers, do you find teaching National Education (NE) to students difficult? Discover innovative ways to make your lessons more interesting through our Educators' Workshop! You will also learn new ways to better engage students! To sign up for the workshop, log on to this website: www. sdc/eduprog/reservation	Teachers, you can browse through the multitude of resources available at the SDC website. Be amazed at the variety of programmes we have in our Discovery Booklet or check out our travelling exhibition and roadshow kits to have an idea of what we have to offer! Modern inventions have played an amazing part in speeding up what people do in their daily lives. The first few inventions such as vehicles can cover a hundred

Other inventions such as the latest computers boast that they can help people save presheous seconds in handling tasks. We can akses information whenever we are using devices such as pocket computers and mobile phones. These devices enable us to log on to news nor contact our friends within seconds.

(43) [ ]

Although these inventions help us to save time, they do so in a price. For instance, when we lose or gain a day while travelling across the world in an aeroplane, our bodies give us some signals. We get an uncumfertable feeling known as jet lag; our bodies feel as though they have been left behind in another time zone.

(44) [ ]

(45) [ ]

In addition, spending too much time in front of computers can result from painful wrists and fingers.

(46) [ ]

Due to the obsession with saving time, many people are trying to immitate

Read the passage below and answer questions 71 to 80. (20 marks)

An hour before midnight, the snow began to fall. Huddled in the warmth of our tent, I knew our last hope of climbing to the peak of a mountain known as K2 might diminish.

Only two of us were in the tent. My brother, Jack, and I had pitched our tent to rest for the night on the world's second tallest mountain. On the slopes far above us, two of our teammates had already pitched the tents near the peak of the mountain, ready for the ultimate challenge. However, if there was a snowstorm while they were attempting to accomplish their mission, it would cost them the victory. The extreme height of the mountain and dryness of the atmosphere would threaten the climbers with severe dehydration that could lead to death.

More than the mountain, the weather had been our problem from the start of our climb. During the two months since we had established base camp at the foot of the mountain, violent summer storms had swept the mountain, delaying our schedule to reach the peak.

In the early morning of September 5, we encountered a crisis. Food, fuel and our endurance had reached dangerously low levels. As snow continued to fall, I dozed off inside the tent. Occasionally, I woke up to peer grimly out at the weather. Jack, who was wide awake, opened the flap of the tent to check frequently. After a while he turned to me excitedly and said, "Alan, there are stars in the sky!"

In our years of climbing mountains, including Mount Everest, I could vividly recall a few moments where there was a change in the weather. Nonetheless, I had mixed feelings. A change of weather did revive our hope to reach the peak of K2. However, this time, Jack and I had to make an agonising decision - whether to risk our lives and continue with the climb or give up and attempt the climb again in future. For years, we had longed to climb K2, as a sequel to our conquest of Mount Everest. Though Mount Everest was a higher mountain, I felt K2 which measured at about 8 600 metres above sea level was a more dangerous mountain to climb.

Sunrise took an eternity. Finally, the first rays touched the peak above. Jack used his camera with a telephoto lens to capture a panoramic view of the mountain. Then, he tried to track the other two teammates along the slopes of the mountain range with a camera. Through his lens, he soon spotted two microscopic figures.

"Our teammates are going for it!" Jack exclaimed excitedly. I sensed a chill down my spine. Would they survive? Against all odds, hour by hour, the figures persevered and advanced towards the peak.

Maya had a fear of water. We were four days into our holiday, and she had not yet set foot into the pool. Our friends tried for days to get her to swim with them, but in vain. I, on the other hand (16), loved water, but I did not know how to swim. I simply stayed on my father's back as he walked around the pool.

Then one fine day, Maya conceded (17) and jumped into the pool to play a game of volleyball. Our friends, along with Maya, swam in the pool near the deep end. My father and I stood near the fountain, enjoying the water splashing on our heads. It was bliss (18) – my father carrying me on his head, the sun shining on my tanned face, and water splashing on my hair. Everything was perfect.

Suddenly, the ball flew over us at full speed. My father turned (19) around to get the ball, and I slipped from his grip. I could feel water rushing in over me, the pressure building up (20). I felt light-headed. I shut my eyes and sank to the bottom. I do not know how long I was there, but it felt like hours.

Read the passage below and answer questions 71 to 80. (20 marks)

Raj was on his way to meet a moneylender to repay his grandfather's debt. He met Shanji, who prided himself on being intelligent and thought that it was a good opportunity to cheat the poor farmer. He believed that Raj was gullible.

"Let us pass the time telling stories, but let there be one condition. No matter how fantastic or ridiculous the story is, neither of us must say that it is false. Whoever does so, must pay the other five hundred dollars!"

Raj agreed because he did not want to annoy Shanji. Then Shanji began to tell a witty and incredible tale to insult Raj.

"My wealthy grandfather bought a unique statue of pure gold which was able to answer any question. He asked who the wisest man in that region was. The statue replied that it was my grandfather. However when it was asked who the most foolish man was, the statue said that it was your grandfather."

"True, oh Shanji, true," said Raj, as he promised himself to give Shanji a taste of his own medicine.

"Here's my story. My grandfather was the wealthiest and strongest man in the region. Therefore he was greatly respected by all. Once, there was a drought; the trees withered away and thousands of animals died. My grandfather lifted the entire village and placed it on his head! Then he carried the village to a place where there was rain. That year, the farmers reaped an abundant harvest and every grain of corn was as big as your head," said Raj.

"True, oh Raj, true," said Shanji, annoyed at the comparison but anxious not to lose the bet.

"In the past, your grandfather was a very poor man," continued Raj. "He was employed as a servant to weigh out the grain for the customers. As he had often made mistakes, he was beaten many times."

"True, oh Raj, true," said Shanji who was seeing red.

By this time, both men had entered the shop of the moneylender to whom Raj's grandfather owed money. They sat down on the floor in front of the moneylender and Raj continued his story, "Your grandfather begged my grandfather to lend him five hundred dollars, Shanji. My grandfather had to borrow money from the moneylender to help him."

"True, oh Raj, true," replied Shanji.

"Very good," said Raj, raising his voice, "But your dishonest grandfather did not repay that debt. Neither have you repaid it."

"True, oh Raj, true," said Shanji.

As Shanji had admitted the debt before the moneylender, Raj requested that Shanji pay the amount to him then. This placed Shanji in a dilemma. Either way, he was a loser. If he said that it was merely a story and completely untrue, he would have to pay Raj five hundred dollars according to the terms of the bet. If he said it was true, he would have to pay the amount to the moneylender. In the end, Shanji was remorseful and he paid up. Never did he underestimate anyone's intelligence again.

Read this passage and answer questions 71 to 80. (20 marks)

The hospital was newly renovated. Being renowned for its new facilities and modern equipment, it was the choice hospital for everyone who lived in that big town.

Martin stepped into the hospital which was 100 floors high. He joined the queue of people, waiting for the lifts. He disliked having to wait but he stayed in line as he was anxious to find out how his elderly brother, Randall, was doing. He had come to see him despite his aversion to hospital. The lift descended to the first floor and the visitors shuffled out of the lift coming face to face with throngs of people.

A bored medical clerk checked off names on a list and rattled off the bed number of the people they had come to see. When Martin's turn came, the clerk said, "Randall? Not down here. You must have come to the wrong ward."

"I was told to come to the first floor and look for Ward 17," Martin answered.

"They're always getting things wrong," the clerk said indifferently, "You had better go back up to the 99th floor and ask the receptionist."

Martin said in a quiet and hard voice, "No, you call them up. I am not wasting my time going all the way up again."

The clerk started to explain, "The procedure..."

Martin leaned over the desk. "Never mind the procedure," he said firmly, "You call them."

The clerk obeyed sullenly. Martin heard the clerk ask for a check on Randall, J., who had been admitted the previous afternoon. The clerk then replied, "Yes, got that," and replaced the phone receiver.

"Well? Where is he?" Martin asked anxiously.

"In the mortuary," the clerk replied without batting an eyelid, "He was taken into Intensive Care Unit this morning and died of heart failure."

"That's impossible!" Martin muttered in shock. His face turned white.

The clerk saw his expression but shrugged and replied nonchalantly, "Please make your way up to 32nd floor for further instructions. Next, please!"

Martin composed himself and just as he was about to head towards the lift, he caught sight of someone that looked like Randall walking towards him.

Need a home tutor? Visit us at www.championtutor.com

Martin stared in disbelief. It was Randall. He looked so deathly pale, but alive! Martin was too stunned to talk. The clerk turned to see someone ghostly with the label "Randall, J.", on his wrist, standing silently next to him. 35

The clerk rolled back his eyes and his body went limp.

Indonesia is one of the biggest paper producing countries. Its large companies, however, are being accused of destroying (16) large parts of Sumatra and other Indonesian islands by cutting down rainforests and replacing them with plantations. Environmental organisations such as Greenpeace are worried (17) that the habitats of endangered species will be destroyed.

About 85% of Indonesia is covered with forests. Since the beginning of the 20th century, forests have been constantly (18) reduced and more than half are caused by humans. Local inhabitants claim they cannot go hunting in the forests anymore as they have no shade to stand under when it gets too hot.

Greenpeace says that it will carry on (19) its fight against deforestation, not only in Indonesia but in other countries that do not stop the destruction of forests. The government in Indonesia has also taken steps (20) in the fight against deforestation. It has extended the ban on the felling of rainforests for another two years.

Read the passage below and answer questions 71 to 80. (20 marks)

The cold winter of 1948 was challenging for my family of four living in Tennessee, United States. We moved from the mountains to the city so that Dad could work in a power plant. Soon, my brother and I attended a new school. Unfortunately, Dad became ill and was out of a job. Mum took in the laundry of our neighbours to pay for the daily expenses. She had a heavy burden.

We had little to eat. I was only 11 years old and my younger brother Edwin was 7. After school, it was our responsibility to gather coal that fell from the coal cars along the railway tracks near our home. We could burn the coal to warm everyone at home during the chilly winter.

I remember that winter as if it was yesterday. There was a track disruption at the crossing and the train screeched to a halt. It stopped for about an hour. Oblivious to the surroundings, my brother and I persevered in the cold, digging around in the snow. Suddenly, the train driver came to the window of the engine cabin and shouted to us, "Why are you boys digging in the snow? Are you looking for gold?" He laughed. His assistant joined in the laughter too.

I told them that we were looking for coal, while blowing on my hands to warm them up. The train driver asked, "Why doesn't your dad buy coal so you can stay away from the trains that pass through here? It's dangerous for two little children to be running along these train tracks."

"Our dad is sick and we do not have any money to buy food. What more coal!" I answered. The train driver became solemn. He turned and stepped into the cabin and my brother and I continued searching for coal again. Suddenly, a voice sounded behind us. The train driver took the bucket from us and filled it with clean coal. We were delighted with his gift, and we knew we would be able to go home early that day. I asked what his name was so I could remember him. He smiled the kindest and warmest smile I had ever seen.

"Just call me Buck. Now, you two boys stay away from the train and when it comes through next time, I'll throw you a scoop of coal," the train driver said. Happily, my brother and I carried the bucket of clean coal back home.

Two days later, Edwin and I stood away from the tracks as the train slowed down at the crossing. The train driver waved to us. Suddenly, out from the train driver's cabin came a large scoop of coal and a piece of red cloth. As I picked the red cloth up, tears welled up in my eyes. Tied to the red scarf were two pieces of chocolate and a new one-dollar bill.

Throughout that winter, three days a week, we received a bucket of coal, a treat and, sometimes, money. I was glad my family and I survived that winter.

Read this passage and answer Questions 71 to 80. (20 marks)

A long time ago, giants ruled the Solomon Islands. On one of these islands lived a widow, Tatau, and her two sons, Joe and Roy. One morning, they heard horns being blown by the villagers, followed by the sound of beating drums. This signified that there were large schools of tuna in the sea in front of them. Joe and Roy knew that it was a good chance to bring in this much-prized catch. Soon, they were placing the hooks and fishing lines in their canoe. They climbed aboard and paddled their way out to join the rest of the fishermen. Tatau stayed at home and went about her normal daily morning chores.

While the brothers were catching tuna, Joe heard his mother screaming for help. He told Roy to stay quiet for a moment. Since they heard no other sound, they went back to their fishing. Moments later, they both heard their dog at home barking non-stop. Both brothers knew that something was wrong. They quickly paddled back to shore. They ran to the house while calling out for their mother. However, all they found was their dog helplessly growling. Tatau was nowhere to be seen. The boys knew something terrible had happened to their mother.

Joe and Roy searched the house and found giant footprints. They quickly deduced that a giant had taken their mother. Giant abductions were common in other villages from time to time. Gathering their bags, axes and spears with their dog following the scent of the giant's trail, they set out in the hope that their mother might still be alive.

With no clear plan of what they would do if they did catch up with the giant, Joe and Roy reached a river's edge. It was apparent to them that the giant was following the river towards the mountains. The coastal people believed that it was dangerous to go to these mountains which were known to be giant territory. If someone did venture there, it was quite likely that they would not return. However, with the obvious giant footprints to follow and their dog still on the scent, they followed the giant's trail along the river's edge for some kilometres. This was a good sign that their mother might still be alive, as there was no evidence that the giant had stopped anywhere to make a meal out of her.

At the foothills of the big mountains, the brothers were fully aware that they could not call out for their mother as this would possibly alert the giant. Their dog sniffed and dug madly under a boulder, which appeared to be the entrance to some sort of cave. With their dog relentlessly digging away at the soil, Tatau's sons guessed that their mother was behind it. The brothers tried to roll the huge stone to the side but found it far too heavy to move. With their bare hands and axes, they began digging away at the soil to loosen the rock.

The giant had temporarily placed Tatau behind that boulder so that he could gather some taro leaves, which these beasts liked eating. He also needed to collect some firewood to build a fire and keep himself warm at night. Joe forced his hand through a small opening which they had made, hoping to find his mother. Tatau grabbed it tightly, much to the brothers' relief. Fully aware that the giant might return at any time, the boys dug frantically, to widen the hole enough to get their mother out.

Vocabulary Cloze
For each question from 16 to 20, choose the word(s) closest in meaning to the underlined word(s). Shade the correct oval (1, 2, 3 or 4) on the OAS.

In ancient times, a woman was considered attractive if she had glossy and lustrous hair. Women from wealthy families spent much time styling their hair in an (16) elaborate manner in order to appear beautiful. Some of these hairstyles would be extremely (17) impractical for today's women.

For men, however, hair on the face, rather than on the head, was the (18) symbol of male power and attractiveness. The beard was always given much attention and grooming. To call a man 'beardless' was to (19) insult him, for it meant that he was immature and weak, like a little boy. All the emperors, ministers and priests, therefore had beards. Slaves, on the other hand, were forced to shave off their beards to show that they were persons of lower (20) rank. Thankfully, such practices are no longer enforced in modern times.

- Challenge your friends to cool sports games!

Have fun while you keep healthy and fit!

Say NO to:
1) Poor eyesight
2) Physical inactivity

The Youth Health Centre aims to help youths in Singapore to adopt good health practices. A majority of Singapore's youths spend a lot of time in front of computers and smartphones. This has given rise to various health problems.

Studies have shown that health promotion programmes can improve the health of youths. A healthy and happy youth is more able to handle the demands of learning and enjoy school life. As such, good health practices need to be inculcated from young.

Join us to have fun and keep fit!

Section I (20 marks)
Comprehension Open
Read the passage below and answer Questions 71 to 80 based on the passage.

Ah Heng pedalled his bicycle steadily along, not caring that the sun was beating down on his narrow shoulders. He also did not care that the veins of his hands stood out like cords. All he cared about was his desperate plan – a plan to carry out a burglary.

"I'm doing this for my sweet daughter, Fen! She deserves that beautiful new box of paints! She can paint grapes and melons that make people want to gobble them down immediately! With a few deft strokes of her shabby pencil, my face appears on the paper, with every wrinkle and nose hair intact! Her artistic talent must not be wasted just because I have no money to buy a new box of paints!" he thought to himself determinedly.

Standing on the main road, he glanced at the art shop. With the aid of a large stone wrapped in a piece of cloth, he was going to smash the window and take the paints that very night. Ah Heng would hide his bicycle in the dark lane by the side of the art shop until he made the grab. Then, he would ride swiftly away into the darkness and disappear before the alarm could be raised.

The hours of daylight dragged on as he sat gloomily on a bench. The thought of stealing weighed heavily on his mind. "Although I am poor and often do not have enough to eat, I have never thought about doing something so wrong before! The gods will not be happy!" he thought guiltily. Squashing his guilty feelings, he imagined Fen working on great canvasses, some big enough to fill the walls of government buildings. With that box of paints, she could excel in Art at school and win a scholarship! The scholarship would allow her to travel to the great cities of Europe to study art! The simple possession of that box of paints would make all his dreams for Fen come true! He had no choice – he had to do the deed.

When the hands of the clock moved past midnight, the streets began to fall silent. Shopkeepers bolted their doors and turned out the lights. Ah Heng fished out the stone from his pocket. Now that the time had come, he found that his hands were trembling and his body had broken out into a cold sweat as he walked towards the art shop. His feet felt numb and heavy. Gripping the stone, the muscles of his right arm tightened as he drew it slowly backwards. Unexpectedly, a thought, swift as a sunbird, winged through his mind, "If I become a thief, Fen wouldn't respect me! Now, even though we are penniless, she can be proud that I am an honourable man." He could not bring himself to throw the stone.

Suddenly, the shrill noise of a fire engine's siren shattered the silence. "No! This must be the work of the gods in heaven!" wailed Ah Heng. From doorways, heads appeared and voices called out. When the fire engine was gone, so was the helpless sobbing figure of Ah Heng. He had failed Fen.

The gods who were watching over Ah Heng smiled at their success.
