Ayyanar's fear had come true. He was afraid, with a deep sense of foreboding, that his mother's actions would bring him shame. He was proven right. One day, at the tea shop, Ayyanar saw a heated argument that almost broke into a fist fight. Ayyanar was shocked and could not help (16) but intervene to pacify them. "Why are you fighting over political parties? Shouldn't we live like a (17) family in this village?" he spoke his mind bluntly. Immediately, the fighting men turned towards (18) him. They cast dagger looks at him, mocking in their gaze. "Look who's talking about family! Here (19) comes the righteous one." Ayyanar gasped for breath. He felt as if he had been spat upon. The (20) words stabbed him and pierced into his heart. He thought the rest of the village was probably saving up its saliva for him, awaiting the right opportunity. If the right moment came, they would not miss the chance to hit him with their footwear angrily.

Most Singaporeans are familiar with Pulau Ubin, having visited the island during school excursions or childhood times.

The second largest island, (29) _____ Pulau Tekong, Ubin largely retains the looks of a rural Singapore. The name Ubin means granite in Malay, as Pulau Ubin (30) _____ once famous for its granite quarries, although most of these quarries ceased operations in the 1960s and 1970s.

How did the island of Pulau Ubin form in the first place? A legendary tale explains that (31) _____ the early days, three animals (an elephant, a pig and a frog) (32) _____ Singapore challenged one another to reach the Johor shores. Those that did not succeed would be turned into stone. The frog failed to cross the straits and was turned into Pulau Sekudu. (33) _____ the elephant and pig did not make it too and they became Pulau Ubin.

In the past, Jelutong River cut (34) _____ the island, splitting it into two halves. Over the years, the mud accumulated from the prawn farms slowly covered the river and joined both regions as one.

Once a major industry on Ubin, granite quarrying started on the island as early as the 19th century. It supported the livelihoods of many islanders (35) _____ by the 1970s, many quarries had their granite sources depleted. The Aik Hwa Granite Quarry was the last to cease (36) _____ operation, having shut down in 1999.

There are currently four large abandoned quarries on the island (37) _____ have since evolved into scenic places, covered with natural vegetation and homes to many birds and other animals.

Pulau Ubin is truly one of the few places left in Singapore largely unaffected (38) _____ the nation's rapid urbanization. That is why it is popular with local visitors.

The Brooklyn Bridge that spans the river tying Manhattan Island to Brooklyn is truly a miracle bridge. In 1863, a create engineer named John Roebling was inspired with an idea for this spectacular bridge. However, bridge-building experts throughout the world told him to forget it as it could not be done.

(39)

(41)

Roebling convinced his son, Washington, whom was a young up and coming engineer, that the bridge could be built. The two of them developed the konsepts of how it could be accomplished and how the obstikles could be overcome. With great excitement and inspeeration, they hired their crew and begun to build their dream bridge.

(42)

(43)

(45)

(46)

The project was only a few months under construction when a trajic accident on site took the life of John Roebling, and servielly injured Washington. Washington was left with permanent brain damage and was unable to talk or walk.

(47)

Even though Washington was unable to move or talk, his mind was as sharp as ever. An idea hit him as he laid in his bed. He developed a code for komunnekashen. All he could move was one finger which he used to tap her wife's arm, tapping out the code for her to give instructions the engineers who were building the bridge. Washington tapped his instructions for thirteen years until the spectacular

(48)

Brooklyn Bridge was finally completed.

On 27 August, 1883, the island of Krakatoa in the Dutch East Indies practically blew up in a tremendous volcanic explosion. As a result of this explosion, huge waves _____ (51) more than a hundred metres in the air. These waves _____ (52) hundreds of villages and even ~~were~~ felt on the coasts of Australia, thousands of kilometres away.

In 1946, there was an _____ (53) on the ocean floor near the Aleutian Islands. The result was a gigantic wave that travelled 3000 kilometres and _____ (54) Hawaii. It lifted houses and bridges and carried them hundreds of metres _____ (55).

Both of these great _____ (56) are what we call 'tidal waves'. A tidal wave is also known as a tsunami, which is a Japanese word _____ (57) giant wave. Tidal waves are giant waves that hit the shore and _____ (58) coastal flooding and great damage. The name is _____ (59), because these waves have nothing to do with tides, the daily rise and fall of water levels of the world's great bodies of water.

A tidal wave is caused by some disturbance on the bottom of the sea. Usually this is an earthquake that takes place on the ocean floor which in turn _____ (60) a shock wave that travels through the water, just as loud sound travels _____ (61) the air. In fact, this shock wave _____ (62) with the speed of sound. If a ship happens to be in the region, it will be rocked by the shock and it feels just as if the ship has struck a rock.

When an earthquake takes place on the ocean bottom, the _____ (63) floor shifts and slides. It is this motion and the shock of the disturbance that produces tidal waves. Once the tidal wave is formed, it begins at once to move across the sea at great speed. It is so huge that it can reach up to 30 meters in _____ (64).

When a tidal wave approaches land, the _____ (65) sign, oddly enough, is just like an ordinary wave. Then the sea level falls for a number of minutes as if it were a very low tide. A big area of ocean floor near the coast may be exposed. Finally, the great tidal wave comes crashing in, destroying everything in its path!

Have you ever heard the saying, "When a horse bucks you off, get right back on and ride again?" Have you ever been in a situation like that? Bethany Hamilton has. For her, the horse was actually a surfboard. And, instead of getting bucked off, a tiger shark bit off her arm.

Bethany was born on the North Shore of Kauai, Hawaii, and started surfing before she could walk. She won her first surfing competition when she was four. She continued to win competitions and soon, Bethany was sponsored by Rip Curl, a surfboard company, and was making plans to become a professional surfer. She was a surfer girl, born to surfer parents, living in a surfer's paradise. What could be better? 5

On that fateful morning in 2003, Bethany paddled into the waves of Makua Beach near her home with her best friend, Alana, and Alana's father and brother. There was nothing unusual about this, as this was how Bethany spent most mornings. Usually her mother and father were there too, but Bethany's father was scheduled for knee surgery that day and was already at the hospital. The sky was as clear as the water, and the waves were relatively calm. Bethany surfed for about half an hour and caught maybe ten waves. Everyone knew each other at Makua Beach and Bethany, Alana and about eight other surfers chatted and joked as they straddled their boards in the gentle swells, waiting for the next set of waves to roll in. Bethany dangled her left arm in the water. From below, Bethany and her board must have looked like a lazy sea turtle – which many sharks enjoy for breakfast. 10 15

The tiger shark rose out of the depths and tore into Bethany's board. "We never saw it or anything, before it bit me," Bethany recalled. "It shook me. It lasted about three seconds long. All I saw was a grey blur. It let go and I just looked at the red blood in the water." 20

The other surfers pushed Bethany to shore and her friend's father tied a surfboard leash around what was left of her arm to help slow the bleeding. Alana noted that Bethany stayed really calm. As Bethany lay on the beach wrapped in towels, she remembered thinking, "That ambulance should hurry up." 25

It was 50 kilometres to the hospital. When the ambulance arrived there, doctors were preparing Bethany's father for his knee surgery in the operating room. The doctors quickly went to work on Bethany instead of her father. Bethany lost seventy percent of her blood. She also lost her left arm, just below the shoulder. Bethany's surgeon said that without her athletic conditioning, she probably would have died. 30

Two weeks later, Bethany and her father had their stitches removed. Her doctors were sure that the loss of an arm would not hold Bethany back physically but they warned that getting over the mental and emotional shock of a shark attack would be hard, perhaps even impossible. Though her wound healed within a month, her friends and family worried that Bethany might never again get back on her surfboard. 35

Less than a month later, Bethany was on her surfboard, waiting to catch that first wave. Finally, a good wave came and Bethany paddled as hard as she could. When she felt the wave start to push her board, she jumped up and planted her feet wide. "When I got up on my first wave," she said, "I just had tears of happiness. I was so stoked to be out there."

Bethany did not stop with catching a wave or two. In the same year, she placed fifth at the National Surfing Championships, beating many professionals with many more years of experience and both their arms and went on to secure a place on the US Surfing Team. Since her injury and amazing recovery, Bethany has been featured in many articles and has appeared on television. 40

"People I don't know come up to me these days. I guess they see me as a symbol of courage and inspiration. One thing hasn't changed, and that is how I feel when I am riding a wave. It's just me and my board." 45

King Tut, an ancient Egyptian pharaoh, died 3,300 years ago. In 1922, a British explorer (16) discovered King Tut's tomb, which was filled with treasures. His remains and burial items are among the most (17) iconic objects associated with ancient Egypt.

Now, archaeologists have a hunch that King Tut may not have been alone in his tomb for all of those centuries. A British Egyptologist recently asserted that certain parts of King Tut's tomb point to the (18) existence of a hidden chamber. He also said the tomb appears to have been designed (19) originally for a queen, rather than a king.

Archaeologists have been searching for the queen's tomb for many years. Her tomb could hold items which are more (20) spectacular than those found with King Tut. Finding the queen's tomb would be an enormous accomplishment.

Section I – Comprehension Open-ended (20 marks)

Read the passage and answer questions 71 to 80.

It was the first day of the skiing season and I was eager to go snowboarding with my friend, Gordon, at Camp Muir. The route here had a breathtaking scenery. I knew the route well and above all, it had very little, if any, avalanche (snowslide) danger.

I only brought my probe and shovel. Gordon turned to me and said, "Luke, I forgot my transceiver (a device which can send out signals for help). Do you think we should still go?" 5

"Neither did I. Let's go!" I sounded confident without a second thought as between the two of us, we had taken this route over forty times. A thought I later regretted.

The sky was clear but the wind was strong. At one point, a gust blew both of us more than a metre back. That would be even more ferocious higher up, I thought. 10

Our first few runs of snowboarding were awesome though the wind had buffeted all sides. By then, we had about twenty skiers, climbers and boarders in sight. The snow showed no signs of weakness and so we did not plan on digging any pits to check the stability of the layers underneath. Besides, this was considered a safe area for skiing. In other words, I was all too confident in the snow and my ability to react to challenges in the mountain. A thought I later regretted too. 15

On the way down, Gordon spotted some avalanche debris, the first we saw. That should have raised our avalanche awareness.

When we were snowboarding down the steep slope, we paused at what we saw: a terrain trap. A wave of snow rushing down here would bury anyone unlucky enough to be stuck there. 20

I could see a safe way out at the other side of the slope. "Let's get out of here," I told Gordon. I did not even look uphill. If I had, I might have noticed an avalanche slope, ready to rip.

"Slide!" Gordon yelled. 25

A second later, the snow in front of me started to move. I was standing on an island of snow that was going downhill. However, I had no fear. It was a little avalanche and I knew I could easily ride it out. Instantly I turned my board around. That was when I realised it was taking me down into the terrain trap. This was going to be serious.

From my avalanche training, I knew I should toss aside my snowboard and backpack immediately as they could drag me under the snow. I did not do that. I figured I could still make it, and I was right – until the second wave hit. In a flash, a 2-metre high wave of snow rolled over me and I was gone. I finally came to a stop, entombed in freezing coldness. Clearly, I was not going to get out by myself. It was up to Gordon. 35

I knew Gordon did not have a transceiver, but did he have his probe? I knew he had his shovel but how deep was it? Was I going to die right here? All I could think of was my family.

I tried to call out to Gordon again, but my breath had melted the snow, which was then starting to freeze around my head, greatly reducing the oxygen flow. I had given 40 up hope of being saved. I thought my goggles were starting to fog as it was getting darker and darker.

"Lukel Lukel" someone shouted. I realised that Gordon was standing above me.

Right after the second wave hit me, Gordon rushed to a safe spot and grabbed his shovel and probe. He knew the clock was ticking. To get help nearby would mean I would be dead by then. Gordon decided that his only option was to look for me by himself - and fast. He had been searching furiously when he spotted a part of my snowboard poking out. 45

Gordon got my face free and I gasped for air screaming, "You saved my life! You saved my life!" The strange thing was my goggles were not fogged. The day was still clear! The darkness I perceived earlier was actually due to the lack of oxygen. 50

Finally, Gordon dug me out of the snow. I gave him a big hug and said, "Let's get out of here."

Many times I had cheated death but this time, I had paid the highest price. My wife said I still had a few of those nine lives left, but I planned on saving the rest for a long, long time. 55

The film, Journey From Zanskar, is a story about 17 Tibetan children and two monks in northern India. It documented the real-life journey of the children as they were led by the monks across a mountain range to go to the only school which catered to their needs as Tibetan pupils.

(19)

In the winter of 2003, the two monks selected 17 children based on their intelligence and their ability to tolerate the rigours of the long walk. It was a heartrending choice the children's families had to make. Due to the difficult terrain, they would not be able to see one another for eight to ten years.

Geshe Yonten, one of the monks, managed to convince the families that the journey was imperative for the children. He noted that people in the 21st century could not have a good future without modern education.

The Ubin Custom

On Pulau Ubin, we:

- greet one another with a smile
- pick up litter and take them back to the mainland
- leave plants in their natural habitats
- bear in mind that bright lights and loud sounds can startle the local animals
- frown on the use of throwaway plastic bags and bottles

History of Pulau Ubin

Pulau Ubin, an island off Changi, was formerly a cluster of 5 smaller islands separated by rivers. Local Malays used to call it "Pulau Bantu Ubin", or "Granite Stone Island", as granite from the island was mined and used to make floor tiles.

The earliest inhabitants of the island were the Malays from Indonesia. By the mid-1800s, a large Chinese community had moved to the island to work at the granite mines. During the 1880s, around 50 Malay families from the Kallang River in mainland Singapore moved to Pulau Ubin to be fishermen.

Granite mining activities on Pulau Ubin peaked in the 1930s and attracted many people to the island. The ten granite mining companies on the island were the main employers of the residents. Besides granite mines, there were also coffee, durian, and rubber plantations across the island. Other sources of livelihood included prawn farming, fishing and poultry rearing.

As the population grew larger, the unhappiness between the original residents and the newcomers led to the issue of maintaining social order on the island. Furthermore, a number of Chinese immigrants to the island were members of Chinese secret societies. As a result, there were frequent clashes between the different societies. The violence ended only after the Japanese occupied the island during the Second World War.

By the 1970s, the granite mining industry began to decline. The last mines on the island closed in 1999. Commercial crop farming and rubber tapping on Pulau Ubin officially ceased in the 1980s.

The population on the island gradually dwindled with the closure of granite mines. In 2016, it was recorded that 38 residents remain on Pulau Ubin.

Emperor penguins spend their entire lives on Antarctic ice and in its waters. They survive _____ relying on a number of clever adaptations. (31) These flightless birds breed in the winter. A female emperor penguin lays one single egg. _____, it leaves its breeding site! The male penguin balances the egg on his feet and covers it _____ his brood pouch, a very warm layer of feathered skin designed to keep the egg cosy. (32) (33)

Male penguins stand with the eggs on their feet for many days, through icy temperatures, cruel winds, _____ blinding storms. After about two months, the females return to the breeding site from the sea with their bellies full of food (34) _____ they regurgitate to feed the newly hatched chicks. The males now (35) eagerly leave _____ their own fishing session at sea, and the mothers will now (36) take _____ the care of the chicks for a while. As the young penguins grow, the (37) adult penguins leave _____ in groups of chicks called creches whenever they (38) go out to fish. When the Antarctic weather gets warmer, _____ ice that the (39) penguins occupy begins to break up, bringing open waters closer to the chicks. Now the chicks are old enough to make their way _____ the seas and fish for their (40) own food. However, once in the Antarctic waters, they risk being eaten by sharks and leopard seals.

If you notice tiny birds hovering over flowers as they feed on their nectar, you are probably seeing hummingbirds. _____ 7.5 to 13 centimetres, they are among the smallest of birds. Erik stood alone in the living room of his grandparents' house. He felt uncomfortable staying with these strangers who had his photographs prominently displayed in the living room. He hardly knew his grandparents. Erik was also upset that his parents, both in the army, were despatched to work in Iraq. Why so sudden? Still upset over his situation, Erik decided to explore his grandparents' farm to distract himself.

Erik wandered into a storehouse full of farm equipment. Suddenly, he heard a noise outside. He was stock-still, listening intently. It sounded like someone panting heavily, as if he had been running hard. Who could be running? No one was around except him. Curiosity piqued, Erik resolved to check out what or who had made the strange noise. Cautiously, he peered out of the door. From the corner of his eye, he caught sight of something slinking into the barn house on four legs. He knew then it was not a person but an animal. Erik opened the barn door gently. He strained his eyes in the dimly lit barn. His racing heart was in fear of what that animal was.

He saw movement in the corner by the bales of hay. Mustering his courage, he began walking very slowly toward the sound. Knowing that a cornered animal could be dangerous, he approached the bales of hay from the side to give it a clear escape route. He hoped it would choose to bolt instead of attacking him. As he drew nearer to it, he could hear the animal panting harder and could see it was shaking. Closer now, he could see that the animal was a medium-sized dog. Its fur was mottled, and there was something really odd-looking about its head. The creature whimpered in earnest then lifted its head. Sticking out from its muzzle were about a hundred of what he immediately knew were porcupine quills. They were whitish tan in colour and about three to five centimetres long. Erik gasped and stopped, not knowing what to do. He tried to remember what he had read or heard about them. He was sure they were difficult and painful to remove. Despite its obvious pain, the dog gazed up at him wagging the tip of its stubby tail back and forth several times. Erik closed the barn door and ran back to the house. He called his grandmother who was at the market. She reassured him that she would get her veterinarian friend, Bob Thompson, to come soon. Erik went back out to the barn, where the dog remained curled up by the bales of hay. With great care, he reached out and gently stroked its side. Soon, he heard a car pull into the driveway. Erik opened the barn door and called his grandmother and her friend over to the barn house. Dr Bob examined the dog quickly. He told Erik and his grandmother, "Erik, I'll need you to hold it still while I pull out the quills.

The dog flinched violently and yelped but Erik held its head tightly. "It was a good thing it did not roll on the ground to relieve the pain, otherwise it would drive the quills in farther into itself," the veterinarian continued, "The truth is, porcupines are gentle creatures which will not attack unless they feel threatened." Finally, it was over. Dr Bob gave the dog an injection of antibiotics which it did not like at all. This was followed by some antibiotics cream. The dog seemed to like it a lot. Dr Bob laughed as it licked off all the cream he had just applied. "Can I keep this stray dog?" asked Erik. "You don't have to worry about keeping it too long. I think it must have just slipped its collar. It's a purebred German Shorthaired Pointer. Its owner will be looking for it pretty soon," Dr Bob assured Erik's grandmother who agreed to provide a temporary shelter.

Running a marathon is very demanding. The official distance of a marathon is 42.195 kilometres. A competitive athlete of this sport must prepare himself well for the race. Apart from getting accustomed to running long distances, he needs to build up his physical and mental strength. Lifting weights aids the development of his muscles and learning how to pace himself ensures that he does not overexert himself too quickly.

(18)

During training, the athlete must be absolutely focused on the sport by having adequate rest and keeping to a proper diet. If he does not nourish his body, he cannot reach his peak performance.

(19)

Should he suffer injuries during training, he must recover first before resuming his training.

Having embarked on a training programme, the athlete should try to adhere to it so as to reap its full benefits. Only by doing so can he realise his full potential.

I have been volunteering at this event since 2010. In fact, many of the volunteers here are regulars. To prepare for this event, we started our meetings three months back. Every Saturday, we met for 4 hours to plan: designing engaging activities to get as many family members as possible involved, coming up with the promotion poster, liaising with sponsors, etc. We are not paid for the work that we do; however, we are given some snacks and drinks, sponsored by the Ministry of Community Affairs. The work is tiring but we feel that it is all worthwhile when we see families coming together and having a good time. Many of them are very appreciative and thank us for our effort.

We hope to see you there!

As a journalist, I have been honoured to interview some exceptional girls.

_____ girls will not let anyone stand in the way of their education.
(29)

Amina is one such girl. I interviewed Amina last summer when I travelled _____ Nigeria. Her home is a place _____ girls are forced to quit

(30) (31)
school after a few years and stay at home. _____ not having a chance to attend secondary school, Amina has persisted in attending one. The act of simply showing up at secondary school is frowned upon but Amina has stood up for her right to _____ education. She excels in her studies and serves _____ a role model for other (34)
(32)

girls. Many girls have been _____ inspired by Amina's shining example that they (35)
have decided to strive to be like her.

Meeting Amina made me realise this - while basic education provides children

_____ skills to find jobs, it is secondary education that helps turn a bright, brave girl like Amina into a confident and strong leader. _____ can influence others.
(36)
(37)

Every girl _____ get a chance to have secondary education. Let us help girls like Amina to have an opportunity to study beyond primary school.

Bill Tullos is an elderly farmer who lives on the farm in Texas. Till today, the memory of one major drought is still vivid at his mind.

(40)

In 1950, the rain did not come. Fields and crops withered and water holes dry up. May and June were usually the rainy months. Therefore, there was no rain during those two months that year. Tullos ran into trouble keeping his livestock alive. Hence, he started selling all his livestock at very low prices at the market.

(41)

All across Texas, men and women, accustomed to living tough lives, were nearing their breaking point. The prices of food for livestock and water for crops were exorbintent, causing many to paying a fortune for them. Many of the water sprayed on the soil evaporated before it could even soak in because the air was hot and dry. The effect was dizastrious.

(42)

(43)

(45)

(46)

Within months, the fields were bear.

(47)

(48)

Some farmers went out of bizness and others began to question their cornittment to farming. Finally, the rain came. The situation started to improve. Because the crops had begun growing, the farmers still faced a long road back to the good old days. Tullos was glad that his family managed to pull through that crysis. Today, his family are still running a farm in Texas.

There are many types of diseases that can affect lives and doctors are trying hard to find cures. Infectious diseases, like measles, are passed _____ person to person but vaccinations can help to prevent them. Other diseases, _____ as heart disease or lung cancer, are not infectious. They are triggered _____ harmful substances in the environment. The treatment of such diseases may _____ surgery or even the replacement of body parts.

To detect any disease in _____ body, doctors do not only look for signs of diseases to find out what is wrong with their patients. They also _____ about their symptoms and the family's medical history. _____ reaching a conclusion, the doctor may conduct more tests to confirm the cause of the illness.

Surgery is one option from the wide _____ of treatments that are available to treat diseases. It involves cutting into the body to remove, repair or replace damaged body parts. It takes place in an operating room, _____ is kept as clean as possible. Sterile gowns and masks are worn to _____ any spread of infection.

Today, many damaged body parts can be replaced. For example, knee and hip joints that wear _____ with age can be replaced with artificial ones. These artificial replacements help many people to go about their lives normally. Doctors predict that in the _____, it may be even possible to grow new organs from cells. This can bring hope to kidney patients whose _____ have failed. They also think that one day it _____ be possible to even rebuild the damaged spinal cord of someone who has been paralyzed in an accident.

It is _____ of such breakthroughs that we are able to live better and longer today. Without the dedication of doctors who continue to find cures for their patients, we will not be able to enjoy such a good quality of life.

Miss Marilla went to town and returned in the evening. Anne found her foster mother in the kitchen, sitting by the table with her head leaning on her hand. Something in her posture struck a chill to Anne's heart. It was a sight that she had never seen before. Miss Marilla was in such a depressed state.

"Are you very tired, Miss Marilla?" Anne asked anxiously. 5

"Yes, I am. I just saw the eye specialist and he examined my eyes. He does not have good news for me. He advised me to give up reading, sewing and any kind of work that strains the eyes. Also, if I refrain from crying and wear the glasses that he has given me, he thinks my eyes may not get any worse. But if I don't heed his advice, I'll certainly be stone-blind in six months. Blind! Anne, just think of it!" Miss Marilla poured out her woes. 10

For a minute, Anne was silent. It seemed to her that she could not speak. Then, forcing a smile on her face, she said bravely, "Miss Marilla, don't worry too much."

"What am I to live for if I can't read, sew or do anything? I might as well be blind. As for crying, I can't help it when I get lonesome. It's no good talking about it. Don't tell anyone about this yet. I can't bear people coming here to question and sympathise with me," said Miss Marilla bitterly. 15

When Miss Marilla had eaten her dinner, Anne persuaded her to go to bed. Then Anne sat in the darkness alone with tears rolling down her cheeks. Her heart was heavy. Her mind drifted back to the moment when she received the letter to inform her that she had won the scholarship. She had been full of hope and the future had looked rosy with promise. Anne felt as if it was so long ago. She thought hard to figure a way out of this predicament. Finally, she found peace in her heart and went to bed with a smile on her lips. 20 25

A few days later, Miss Marilla sat by the window and there were tears in her eyes. Her voice broke as she said, "Our neighbour, Mr Sadler, came this morning. He heard that I was going to sell our farmhouse. He wants to buy it to expand his."

Anne asked incredulously, "Are you serious about it?"

"I've thought it over. I may lose my sight and I'll be alone. I won't be able to find my way around. Mrs Lynde, our neighbour, has agreed to take me in. I'm thankful enough that you're provided for with that scholarship, Anne. I'm sorry you won't have a home to come to during your school holidays," Miss Marilla wept. 30

"You won't have to be alone. I'll be with you. I'm not going to study overseas. I have rejected my scholarship and applied for teaching in this town to accompany you. I won't change my mind. We'll be very cosy here," Anne said resolutely. 35

Miss Marilla exclaimed, "I can't let you make such a sacrifice for me!"

"There is no sacrifice. Nothing is more important than you. You have adopted me and this place is my home," Anne said, her voice laced with gratitude.

I walked through the house with the stone in my hand. The memory of standing in the small room where, as a child, I used to play the violin, came to mind.

It was a beautiful day and the light emanated through the trees outside the window. I pictured the slippery foam mattress that served as a bed for friends who came to sleep over, and the family cat, hiding under the coffee table. A rainbow-colored crustacean moves along the ocean floor, adding a splash of brightness to the murky setting. The animal's narrow, hard-shelled body sports orange, green, red, and blue hues. Known (29) _____ the peacock mantis shrimp, this beautiful, seven-inch-long critter looks harmless. However, the marine animal packs (30) _____ punch — literally.

Peacock mantis shrimp mostly live underwater (31) _____ the Indian and Pacific Oceans. The crustacean spends much of its time looking for crabs to eat. When it finds a delicious-looking snack, the animal goes (32) _____ full-on boxer mode. Springing out one of its club-like front claws, the animal delivers a swift punch (33) _____ its prey. The punch is 50 times faster (34) _____ the blink of an eye and strong enough to break glass!

These shrimps also rely on their sparring moves to keep enemies away from burrows in the ocean floor (35) _____ they use as shelters. Hovering at the opening of its burrow, a peacock mantis shrimp will strike at intruders that come (36) _____ close.

The shrimp (37) _____ another eye-popping feature in addition to its strong punch. Its eyes —which protrude from its head and move independently— (38) _____ see in two different directions at once. They can also detect colours that humans are unable to see. It's easy to be floored by this animal's cool traits!

A negative review _____

After being flown back to Britain, I learned that my vertebrae in my back were fractured and I had come within a whisker of severing my spinal cord and never moving again. I was an invalid. Lying unable to move, sweating with frustration, my only way of escape was in my mind.

When I was a boy, Dad and I used to talk about Everest as we walked along the cliffs. I would pretend we were climbing the summit face in utter confidence that I could conquer the world's highest mountain with Dad beside me. This was one of my crazy dreams; and now as I recuperated at home, I looked around my bedroom and the old picture I had of Mount Everest seemed to peer down. So much of my focus during my recovery centred on Everest. It gave me something to aim for, but no one in my family really took it seriously.

After three months in bed at home, I was posted to the military rehabilitation centre. The treatment was intense. I often worked for 10 hours a day – it was tiring but I persevered. Slowly my movement returned and the pain lessened. By the time I left the centre, eight months after the accident, I was on the mend.

Then came a great stroke of luck. I heard an old military buddy was getting together a British team to climb the south-east ridge in 1998. Captain Neil Laughton had got close to Everest's summit in 1996 and agreed to my joining his team after proving myself on a less ambitious expedition.

The south-east ridge was the face that Hillary and Tenzing climbed when they were the first men to the summit in 1953, and one of the most dangerous. Over several weeks, we had to acclimatise in the foothills of the Himalayas, so that our bodies could adjust to lesser oxygen. It would take us the best part of six weeks just to reach Camp Four, some 3,000ft below the peak. This is the Death Zone, where humans are not meant to survive. Once inside the mountain's jaws, at this height, your body is dying. Every hour is borrowed time. You can no longer digest food effectively and your body weakens in the thin air. At this height, all you want is to curl up in a ball and be alone.

We decided to leave camp at 9pm. The weather forecast had promised strong winds higher up, which would increase during the day. At midnight we came across deep powdery drift snow. We hadn't expected this. It drained our reserves as we floundered about, attempting to wade up through it. It took three steps just to make the ground of one.

At 1am, Neil, Alan and I arrived at a ledge called the Balcony, 27,500ft above sea level. Excitement filled my body. We had to wait for our Sherpas (elite mountaineers) to bring fresh oxygen canisters that should last to the summit and back to the Balcony, giving us ten hours to complete the final ascent. It was minus 40F.

At 2am there was still no sign of the Sherpas – and on such a small flow of oxygen, frostbite can creep up on you silently and quickly. Suddenly the entire sky lit up. Thunder rippled through the valleys. "This shouldn't be here," I thought. An electric storm was moving up. If it reached us, it would turn the mountain into a raging mass of snow and wind that would be impossible to endure. Somewhere beneath us, Geoffrey and Michael decided to turn back, spent and exhausted.

At 3am, shivering incessantly, we saw the torches of the Sherpas approach. We then struggled with ice-cold fingers to change our oxygen tanks. We were on our way when one of the three Sherpas suddenly stopped. Silently, he pointed at the sky and shook his head. He turned around and headed down without a word. Everyone makes their own choices up there and you live by those decisions. Neil and I looked at each other, then turned and headed up on to the ridge.

Ahead, I could see the final ridge stretching away towards the Hillary Step – the 40ft ice wall that forms one of the mountain's most formidable hurdles. Something deep inside me knew that I could do this.

Shuffling along the knife-edge ridge, we moved onward. Cowering from the wind, I tried to make out a route up the Hillary Step. This ice face was to be our final and hardest test. The outcome would determine whether we would join those few who have seen and touched that hallowed ground above. At this height, in this thin air, and with 40mph winds trying to blow us off the ice, it was tough.

I heaved myself over the final lip and strained to pull myself clear of the edge. Finally, I could see a distant cluster of flags, semi-submerged in the snow, flapping in the wind. These flags marked the true summit – the place of dreams. I felt a sudden surge of energy rising within me, adrenalin coursing around my veins and muscles. The mountain was beckoning me up. I was breathing and gasping like a wild animal in an attempt to devour the oxygen. 50

Slowly the summit loomed nearer. I could feel my eyes welling with tears. I started to cry. Emotions held in for so long, I couldn't hold back any longer. I staggered on. There had always been part of me that never believed I could make it. Since my broken back, a little part of me, deep down, had thought it was impossible. Yet ever since that hospital bed, I had wanted to be fixed – physically and emotionally. And right here, at 29,030ft, as I staggered the last few steps, I was healing. At 7.22am on May 26, 1998, with tears still pouring down my frozen cheeks, the summit of Everest opened her arms and welcomed me in. My pulse raced and in a haze I found myself suddenly standing on top of the world. 60

Alan embraced me, mumbling excitedly into his mask. Neil was still staggering towards us. As he approached, the wind began to die away. The sun was rising over the hidden land of Tibet and the mountains were bathed in crimson red. Neil knelt and crossed himself on the summit. Then, together, with our masks off, we hugged as brothers. 65

The most challenging obstacle was 'The Slippery Slope'. It was steep and covered with mud. I failed a few times but the crowd kept cheering me on. I recalled I almost gave up as I was exhausted and did not have much energy left. I reminded myself that a warrior is a brave and strong person and decided to press on and pushed myself to sprint towards the finishing line. I was covered in mud, dirt, sweat, tears and of course, some bruises from the fall! I remembered hearing a loud horn being blown to signal that there was a champion. To my surprise, I was the champion! Being able to push myself beyond my limits was a rewarding experience. What surprised me the most was that the warriors displayed great sportsmanship. They helped one another by encouraging those who had fallen to keep on trying instead of putting them down. It was truly an amazing experience!

Adidas or Puma? The rivalry among two of the world's most recognisable brands went far beyond mere corporate competition. It was a viscious family feud that not only pit two brothers against each other, but also divided the inhabitants of their hometown into opposing cliques, one that lasted 60 years.

41)

42)

In the 1920s, the brothers were partners in the Dassler Brothers Sports Shoe

43)

Company, operated out of their mother's laundry room in the small German town of Herzogenaurach. Adolf ("Adl") Dassler was the quiet, thoughtful craftsman who 44) designed and made the shoes, complements by the older Rudolph ("Rudi") who was the extroverted salesman. Legendary African-American track star Jesse Owens sported their shoes when he competed and won four gold medals in the 1936 Olympics.

45)

46)

Owens' victory gave the shoes International exposed and sales of the Dasslers' product exploded.

But the success created new tensions in the brothers' relationship, which was 47)

already strained by the fact that their families lived in the same villa since their wives not getting along. The conflict excalated as the brothers split the company in two in 1948, 49)

48)

dividing the assets and the employees between themselves. Adi named his company

"Adidas," a combination of his first and last names. Rudl attempted to do the same by first naming his company "Ruda" but eventually changing it to the more athletic sounding name, "Puma." The two built competing factories on opposite sides of the river, Aurach and quickly became responsible for much of Herzogenaurach's economy, with nearly everyone working for one company or the other.

50)

Piracy is an act of robbery by ship-borne or boat-borne attackers upon another ship. Its main goal is to steal cargo and other (51) _____ items. In the 2000s, pirates armed (58) _____ automatic weapons and rocket-propelled grenades used small motorboats to attack and board ships, a tactic that (59) _____ advantage of the small number of crew members on modern cargo vessels and transport ships. They also used larger vessels, known (60) _____ "motherships", to supply the smaller motorboats. Read this passage and answer questions 71 - 81.

Bill walked through the front door of his home with a newly purchased puppy in his arms. The dog did not have a hip socket and walked with a serious limp. His selection of a disabled puppy intrigued his parents. Bill had lost all hope of ever making a full recovery, but with his new companion, his parents sensed a newly revitalized spirit of hope and enthusiasm emerging from him. Instead of being caught up in his own condition, he channeled his energy to helping his dog. 5

The next day, Bill and his mother went to see a veterinarian to find out how best to help the puppy. The vet explained that Bill had to stretch and massage his puppy's leg every morning so that the muscles around his missing hip socket would eventually strengthen. He also had to walk the puppy at least one kilometre per day. Then the puppy would have less of a limp. 10

Although the dog whimpered and barked out his discomfort and Bill winced and struggled with his own leg brace, they religiously kept to their massage and walking rehabilitation regimen for the next two months. By the third month, they were walking three kilometres every morning before school and they were both walking without pain. 15

One Saturday morning as they returned from their workout, a cat leaped out from the bushes and startled them. Ripping the leash from Bill's grip, the dog lunged for the cat and darted into oncoming traffic. With a speeding truck only seconds away, Bill instinctively ran into the street, dove for his dog and rolled into a gutter. He was too late. The dog had been hit and was bleeding profusely from the mouth. As Bill lay there crying and hugging his dying dog, he noticed that his leg brace was bent and broken. With no time to worry about himself, he sprang to his feet, picked up his dog and sprinted back home. 20

Bill's mother rushed them to the pet hospital. As they anxiously waited to see if his dog would survive the surgery, Bill asked his mother why he could now walk and run. 25

"You had osteomyelitis, which is a disease of the bone," she said. "It weakened and crippled your leg, which caused you to limp in severe pain. Your brace was for support. It was not necessarily a permanent condition if you were willing to fight through the pain and hours of therapy. You responded well to medication, but you always resisted when we encouraged you to go for physical therapy and your father and I did not know what to do. The doctors told us that you were about to lose your leg. But then you brought home this special puppy. It was amazing how you both seemed to understand each other's needs. Ironically, as you were helping him, you were actually helping yourself. The walking rehabilitation regimen that you had with your dog helped to strengthen your leg muscles. You obviously no longer needed the support of a brace and today you discovered it."

Just then the operating room door slowly opened. Out walked the veterinarian with a smile on his face.

Following the success of that campaign, the company launched _____ campaign touching on a major milestone of a student's life the Primary School Leaving Examination. Water supplies are drying up at an alarming rate in Singapore. Professor Biswas, a renowned scientist in water management, said that climate change is going to cause more dry spells and Singaporeans must be ready to face challenges in the future. He also mentioned that authorities here are so effeciand in managing water supply that Singapore residents are not aware of the effects of water shortage. He believes that residents here continue to take the free flowing of fresh, clean water for granted. If he has his way, he would increase the price of water here by 30 per cent imneedately. "In my view, water price should have been increasing a long time ago," he said. He pointed out that they have remained staknent for nearly 18 years. He also added, "Singaporeans use water wasteful for household chores, bathing and other higeinic purposes."

(39)

(40)

(41)

(42)

(43)

(45)

(46)

(48)

The price of clean water for households are currently about $1.50 per cubic metre.

(49)

Each Singapore resident uses about 150 litres of water per day. This is far more than the use in other cities with comparable standards of living. Mr Biswas advised that water can be saved by substeluting a mop for floor cleaning, in place of high-pressure water jets often seen in housing estates. His advice comes at a time when there is an urgent need to save water in Singapore.

Dogs are fascinated by human faces. They look not only for signs of approval or disapproval, but also pay _____ to the direction their owner is looking in.

(52)

Dr Florence, a zoologist, has found that many guide dogs follow _____

(53)

blind owner's 'gaze' even _____ it is unlikely to be a reliable cue.

(54)

To understand dogs better, experiments were _____ to find out how dogs perceive time. Scientists found that most dogs are never late for a meal – they know exactly

(55)

_____ to go for their meal the same time every day. They also

(56)

_____ when to expect their owners home. They would wait patiently at the door for that arrival. When you witness this behaviour, you would assume dogs have a sophisticated understanding of time but that is not _____.

(57)

(58)

However, human beings have two important abilities to help us _____ time. We are able to remember a sequence of events and we are _____ to anticipate future needs or events. Therefore, experiments have proven that dogs may have these abilities – but to a lesser extent.

(59)

(60)

The dog's role in human society has changed over the _____ 100 years. Working dogs now _____ up only a small fraction of the population. Most dogs are kept for companionship. Science is now revealing unexpected benefits to the owner's health. Stroking and talking to a dog is not _____ pleasurable but it is also found to reduce blood pressure. Just taking a dog for a walk can improve _____ owner's well-being in no less than three ways; from the exercise itself, _____ the interaction with other dog-walkers and simply from exposure to the outdoors. Understanding the science of dogs is teaching us more about them and how we can interact with them.

(61)

(62)

(63)

(64)

(65)

Read the passage below and answer questions 71 to 80.

(20 marks)

"Please follow me into the castle." The tour guide raised her bright red flag in the air and strode off. The tour group swiftly followed her. I rolled my eyes and began to shuffle after them until I felt Dad's hand on my shoulder.

"Wait, Jasmine. Mum's just..." Dad pointed towards the gift shop we had just passed. 5

I nodded wearily. "I'll wait here for you." I leant against the crumbling wall and closed my eyes, feeling the sun's warmth. It was fun to be wandering around a castle but the tour guide was snappy and had an irritating voice.

"Come on, young lady, move along please. Everyone's waiting for you." I opened my eyes to see the tour guide glaring at me. 10

"But I'm just..."

"You can't stay here on your own. Let's go," the tour guide said with a disapproving look.

She grasped my elbow and began to march me towards the tour group, who were looking at their watches and clicking their tongues. "It's all right, everyone, I found her." 15

I struggled from her grip. "I'm waiting..."

By then the tour guide had begun talking into her microphone. It boomed around the courtyard we had entered. She had positioned me right in front of her. I glanced back anxiously towards the gift shop. Mum and Dad were nowhere to be seen, so they had to still be inside. I waited till the tour guide turned her head to show the group the castle walls behind her, then I tiptoed back towards the gift shop. 20

However, I never got there. A sign to my right caught my eye. "Torture chamber", I read. Cool! The tour guide had not mentioned that. I paused and looked at my watch. The castle was about to close in ten minutes. Mum always took ages in shops - she would easily be in the gift shop for at least that long. If I went and asked if we could look in the torture chamber, she and Dad might say no. 25

I hesitated for just one more moment. "What if Mum and Dad cannot find me when they come out of the gift shop? I am sure it would take only a minute to have just a quick look."

I then headed towards the sign. The bored-looking guard who was standing at the entrance was focused on a group of tourists as I slipped past him and trudged down the dark stairs. It was silent and smelled musty. When I reached the bottom, only faint lights were glowing. It was a small room with all sorts of horrible-looking tools made of wood and iron in display cabinets. I read the descriptions on them and shivered. This was not a nice place to be on your own. I decided to head back into the sunlight to find Mum and Dad. But as I started towards the stairs, I heard voices above. 30 35

"All clear, Harry?"

"Yes. I just checked a few minutes ago. No one's down there."

"We'll close it now, then. Help me with the door will you?"

My heart began to pound and I raced up the stairs. "No!" I yelled.

40

But it was too late. The iron door clanged into place, plunging the stairs into total darkness.

Silence answered me. I banged on the door with my fists until they were sore. "Please let me out!"

I sank to the ground. I did not know how long it would take until someone found me but I knew I was not going to enjoy the wait.

Dining etiquette is practised differently in different countries. The code of etiquette in Japan varies greatly depending on one's status. It (16) governs the expectations of social behaviour in the country. Some practices may be very regional, thus they may not (17) exist in all regions of Japan. Some (18) customs have changed over the course of Japanese history.

Not finishing your food is not considered impolite in Japan, but rather it is taken as a (19) signal to the host that you wish to be served another helping. (20) On the other hand, finishing your food completely, especially the rice, is an indication that you are satisfied with your meal and do not wish to be served more. Children are especially encouraged to eat every single grain of rice in the bowl and to pick out certain ingredients and leave the rest.

Healthy Eating for Children

Dietary Guidelines for Children:

The dietary guidelines, which are based on scientific evidence and research, provide up-to-date advice on the amount and kinds of food that children need to eat for health and well-being.

Guideline 1

Achieve and maintain a healthy weight by:

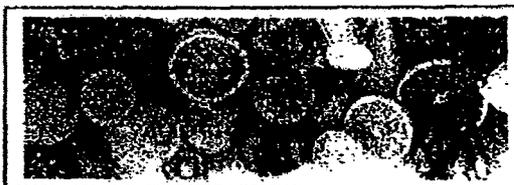

- being physically active
- choosing nutritious food to meet your energy needs

Guideline 2

Enjoy a wide variety of nutritious food from these Five Food Groups every day:

- (1) plenty of vegetables of different types and colours
- (2) a variety of fruits
- (3) wholegrain or high fibre food such as cereal, oats, pasta and bread
- (4) lean meat, poultry, fish, eggs, tofu, nuts and beans
- (5) milk, yoghurt and cheese

Guideline 3

Limit intake of these food and drinks:

- high in saturated fat such as biscuits, pastries, pies, burgers, pizza, fried food, potato chips and savoury snacks
- containing too much salt (Read the labels!)
- containing great amount of sugar such as confectionary and soft drinks

Food to limit - discretionary food:

Children learn best when they are young. Those who grow up in families that enjoy a variety of nutritious food from the Five Food Groups are more likely to make their own healthy choices as they grow older. Parents can lead by the following examples:

- eat a healthy breakfast every day
- save small quantity of discretionary food for special occasions
- learn about how various types of food are grown and where they come from
- try new healthy recipes and involve children with the preparation of food
- turn off the television and computer at mealtimes (Make this family time)
- be physically active

Section G – Comprehension Cloze (15 x 1 mark)

Fill in each blank with a suitable word.

Writing is an important part of our daily lives. It is, (51) _____, a difficult skill to learn and master. By getting a head start with some simple activities, parents can help their children develop good writing skills at an early age. By doing so, parents are actually contributing to the children's future success as students and as adults by teaching them to express (52) _____. As children get older, they will be expected to show more sophisticated writing skills and to complete more sophisticated tasks (53) _____ writing. In addition, many colleges and universities require students to write essays as (54) _____ of their admissions application.

Writing is practical. Every day, we need to write, in (55) _____ to complete our tasks. It could be filling out a form or writing an important letter. These tasks require us to write clearly and organise information effectively. Whether we are writing by (56) _____ or on the computer, many assignments and examinations require us to write short answers or long essays as a way of assessing what we have (57) _____.

Writing can be an important element of an employee's job too. In many kinds of jobs, employees are required to write on a daily (58) _____. For example, they may be required to take (59) _____ telephone messages, do administrative work or write research reports and newspaper articles. Whatever the task is, their ability to do their job well may (60) _____ on their writing skills. Many job applicants must also submit a letter of application when (61) _____ for a new job.

Writing is also an important form of communication. Writing letters and emails is a common way of keeping in (62)_____ with others. Writing can be as difficult a subject to teach and assess (63)_____ it is to learn. Many students have trouble writing with clarity and (64)_____ can discourage them from writing. That is where parent involvement can make a great difference. Encouraging children to develop strong writing skills at a young age can have a lifelong positive impact (65)_____ their writing. This will also make writing an easier and more enjoyable process for the children.

Section I – Comprehension (10 x 2 marks)

Read the passage below and answer questions 71 to 80.

Rainwater fell through the crack on the roof, creating a steady rhythm in our cramped room – home to our family of eight. My parents and my five younger siblings had been living in that room since the day I was born. Hunger was all I had ever known. I was eleven years old then and I had never known what being well-fed was like. I did not know what surplus meant and the only thing I had ever known was shortage. Shortage of food. Shortage of clean water. To make matter worse, my father was retrenched from his job when I turned twelve. The following year, my mother fell seriously ill. 5

Sometimes I woke up in the middle of the night feeling so hungry that I wanted to scream out loud, "Why! Why must I suffer so much?" However, each time I thought of the other seven people trying to sleep in the room, I refrained myself from doing so. At some point, hot tears started rolling down my cheeks and I could not stop the sobs that overcame me. The saddest thing was that sorrow was infectious. Soon, I could hear my siblings crying too. 10

Gradually, I learnt various ways to deal with hunger. I had learnt that if I drank enough water, hunger died. When my head started to spin from the daily labour and lack of food, I kept my eyes shut for a few seconds and dreamt of eating some delicious food – the kind I saw every day when I walked past the bakery. I did not know how any of the food tasted, but it looked beautiful so I imagined its delicious taste. 15 20

Every day since the age of thirteen, I had to stand at traffic junctions, begging people to buy window shields. Days went by under the blazing sun as I tried to earn a livelihood for my family. At times, the sun's intensity was so unbearable that I passed out due to the heat. Occasionally, a kind stranger sprinkled water on my face, offered me some water and left a coin in my hand. Sometimes, I lay on the pavement till I became conscious again, only to see seas of people passing by. 25

On days when I went out to the streets to sell window shields, I saw children in crisp white uniforms seated against the windows of their school buses. I wished I could go to school just like them instead of selling window shields. Once in a while, some children opened their snack boxes and I could not help but stare at the scrumptious food. Soon, the traffic light turned green and the school bus moved forward. I looked at the school bus until it was out of sight. 30

I used to wear rubber sandals every day, but when they turned into a shredded mess of rubber, I walked barefoot on the streets. On hot days, I felt like I was walking on molten coal and on rainy days, I slipped and slid through the mud and grime. It did not help when the grumbling sound in my stomach haunted me everywhere I went. I wished it would go away, so that I could focus on my work. 35

Every night, I hoped that one day, life for my family would change. My brothers and sisters would not have to go to bed crying of hunger. I would earn enough money for my family to be able to move out of the cramped room which reeked of stale air and live in a bigger place. Hope was all that was left for me then. 40

Kevin and his friends decided to report their find to the police. The field was soon swarming with policemen and the bomb disposal unit from the army. ## The "Nut" Case

The Peanut

While "nut" is in their name, peanuts are in fact legumes. Peanuts actually grow underground, as opposed to nuts that grow on trees. The hard shell nut typically has one or two seeds and they would not split open to scatter their seeds when matured. On the other hand, the peanut has multiple seeds found in a single legume and possesses a soft shell which splits easily to scatter its seeds when matured.

I AM NOT NUTS ABOUT

Peanut butter and jelly sandwiches are a favourite of children everywhere. However, almost one-third of schools have gone "peanut-free" to accommodate the growing number of children who suffer from severe peanut allergies. Worried about not being able to enjoy your favourite bread spread? Consumer Reports say fear not!

There are a lot of other nut butters on the market today and most can be safely brought into a peanut-free school. Like peanut butter, cashew and almond-based spreads are a great source of protein and help keep your child full for a longer period of time.

To give nut butters a creamy texture, some nut manufacturers add just a little palm oil. These nut spreads basically contain just wholesome nuts with fewer added ingredients. Consumers also find that they are healthier and taste better.

If along with being peanut-free, your child's school is also "nut-free," you might try a sunflower seed-based butter. Consumer Reports recommends Sunbutter Natural Sunflower Spread and Trader Joe's Sunflower Seed Butter. They taste just like peanut butter and are excellent substitutes!

The above news article was adapted from the website: <http://www.newschannel5.com/>.

Have you ever heard about carnivorous plants? Drawn by _____ (29)
seems like the scent of nectar from a flowerlike patch of red on the ground, a fly lands on the fleshy pad of a reddish leaf. It takes a sip of the sweet liquid oozing from the leaf, brushing a leg against one tiny hair on its surface.

Suddenly, there are walls _____ it. The two sides of the leaf are

BLANK PAGE

Read this passage and answer questions 71 to 80. (20m)

We had now reached the starting point of our journey across the desert. Ahead lay a journey of 600 kilometres, across huge dunes of sands, in temperatures that could soar to 50 degrees during the day, and drop to 7 degrees at night. Nothing stirred, not even a lizard. I had heard terrible recounts of travellers returning from the desert sands. Their lips were blackened and bleeding. They spoke of the extreme heat they had endured, and of the agonising thirst they had suffered. I had heard tales of how others had become walking skeletons of men. 5

That evening, I discussed the journey with my companions. Abu was our leader, an experienced guide who had travelled through the desert two years earlier. Our limited food supply was the main problem. My companions had been too generous in giving away food to travellers we had met on our way to the desert. A month's journey lay ahead of us. That would mean we could only have a quarter of a kilogram of flour for each man per day. We could only carry a supply of water for the five of us for twenty days. That meant the camels would have to go without water throughout that time. Twenty days was the most they could go without water. After that, we would have to start looking for wells. If we did not find any, the camels would collapse. My companions claimed that it was not their own hunger or thirst that they feared but it was the collapse of the camels they feared most. If this happened, we could never make it through the desert alive. 10 15

The next morning, we loaded up the animals and started our journey across the desert. It was not long before we encountered the first of the hills of sand, some of which rose 150 metres above the desert floor. We made our way slowly up one of them, with Abu finding a path for the leading camel which was carrying the largest of our water skins. Going down the other side, this leading camel hesitated and veered off track. Its head-rope attached to the bull camel following behind tightened. As it grew tighter, the rope pulled the leading camel over to one side. 20 25

Because I was following behind, I could see what was going to happen. I shouted frantically to Abu, who was now further down the slope. He was unable to stop the camel on the steep slope. The camel collapsed on top of the water skins, squashing them beneath her. Immediately, Abu was slashing at the head-rope to prevent it from tightening further over its head. If the water skins had burst, our journey across the desert was as good as over. The fallen camel struggled to its knees. The water skins on its back still seemed to be full. 30

After inspecting them, Abu said, "They are alright!" We loaded them on to the bull camel which was behind it, believing that the bull camel would be stronger to carry the water skins. 35

Day after day, we struggled and spent hours climbing great mountains of sand. One evening, when we stopped for our meal, we checked the precious contents of our water skins. There had been a regular and alarming drip from the skins throughout the day. It was like the dangerous loss of blood from a wound that could not be closed. Although we longed for sleep, we had to press on before we ran out of water. After riding for another two hours, we were shivering uncontrollably in the cold night air. We longed for a hot drink, but we knew that we had to resist the temptation as we had already used up our ration of water for that day. Finally, we stopped for the night. Yet, we slept little, for our thirst never left us, and we were worried about our precious water dripping away onto the sand. 40

Joseph Schooling's second homecoming after winning Singapore's historic first Olympic gold was a quiet affair yesterday morning at Changi Airport. Away from his zealous fans, it was a private arrival greeted only by his personal entourage.

This was a far cry from the swim star's first trip home in August after clinching the 100m butterfly gold in Rio de Janeiro. Then, more than 500 fans welcomed him in a rousing reception.

While his arrival at Changi Airport was inconspicuous, he was unsurprisingly the centre of attention at various stopovers with his staunch entourage, which included his parents.

There is nothing like seeing the past unfold right before our eyes. Indeed, museums can tell us a much _____ interesting story than the static words and images in our history _____

(52)

Museums have traditionally been the place _____ objects of the past are preserved and displayed for public exhibition. They _____ as a place where history "speaks" to us. Impressive sculptures and detailed friezes (narrow pieces of decorations along a wall) _____ running narratives, while fascinating antiques reveal most fascinating insights:

(53)

(55)

Indeed, history comes _____ when someone is able to not only read about the past, but is _____ able to examine the artefacts and appreciate the images. With life-size sculptures and the poignant moments in battles captured through friezes, there is a feeling of _____ travel, of being transported back to the ancient times.

(56)

(58)

For _____, impressively carved, white marble sculptures from the famous Parthenon in Athens _____ us about the power and wealth of Athens at the height of its empire. The twenty three blocks of friezes that depict a scene from the battle _____ the Greeks and Amazons take us back in time, as if we _____ onlookers in a live battle, in which we are detached _____ so involved.

(59)

(61)

(62)

(63)

Today, museums increasingly play an important _____ in the development of communities, shaping community identity and bringing different community groups together. They provide a stimulating public space _____ people to come (65) together, interact and be inspired. Yet unveiling the mysteries of our ancestors remains at the heart of museums.

(64)

Section I : Comprehension (Open-ended) 20 marks

Read this passage carefully and answer the questions 71 to 80.

I was only three days into a graduate year in England when I was dragging my backpack and suitcase through the London Underground. I was also crying uncontrollably with a heavy heart. As I struggled to get the suitcase up another flight of steps, I was struggling to understand how my life had fallen apart ever since I left America.	5
The day before, my uncle had informed me that I was never to speak to any of his family members again. Earlier, I had made a senseless comment. It was never meant to hurt my aunt's feelings but it did. I spent the evening in a telephone booth, weeping as I spoke to a family friend who lived in England.
The foolish part was that I did not immediately call my parents. As a 22-year-old who had been raised to respect and trust adults, I believed my uncle and aunt when they said I had ruined the relationship between themselves and my family. Today, as a 38-year-old, I know this was ridiculous. Their reaction was all out of proportion. However at that time, it was as if I had razed everything my family had built.	10
When I left the telephone booth, I went back to a silent house with three closed bedroom doors. I did not sleep. In the morning, I heard my uncle and aunt get up and leave. They did not knock on my door to say a quick goodbye. They were never that cold towards me. When it was quiet, I wrote a note of apology and left it in my uncle's bedroom. I dragged my suitcase to the train station. When I arrived at London, I had to take the subway to get to my family friend's house.	15 20
I was familiar with the subway but at that time, it was a tube of endless white tiles. I was exhausted. Worst of all, no lifts were working. Crying yet again, I tried to lift my suitcase up the stairs.
Suddenly in my slog there were hands. No one said anything but each time I faced another set of steps, a hand would grip the suitcase handle and lift it. At the top of the steps, the hand would let go and I would pull the suitcase to the next set. And just as I was about to struggle again, another hand would appear.	25
It happened several times. I never looked up because I could not stop crying. I do remember thinking through the haze of grief that each hand looked different, that many different people helped me without asking or saying anything. They just helped, right up to the top of the last flight of stairs. I could not look up. I was not able to say a word of thanks.	30
I went on to have an outstanding year studying in England. I also made some friendships that continue to sustain me. However, that was the last time I saw or spoke to my uncle or aunt. Yet when I think about my harrowing story in 1998, I remember vividly those strangers' hands. They were there when I needed them and even now, they pull me through the sadness of that memory. I think of them as I ride the subway in Washington today. I watch the commuters and tourists surge by intently, just in case someone needs a hand desperately.	35

Children with common traits like to get together in small groups. The thing that _____ a group a clique is that they leave some friends out on _____. Usually one or two popular children control who gets to be in the clique and who gets left out. Some children _____ to act much differently than they did before they were part of the clique.

(53)

Everyone feels excluded by friends _____ in a while. Friends are people just like (54)

Children may form cliques in schools. Cliques may be formed by children who share an

(58)
to _____ to a group or want to be popular. _____ boys and girls have cliques, (59) _____ (60) though studies show girl cliques may be more common. Girl cliques are often meaner and more hurtful in the way they _____ girls who are not in the group.
(61)

One of the hardest things about cliques is when a person who was your friend joins one and starts treating you _____. Sometimes, the problem starts with an _____

A frail old man lived with his son, his daughter-in-law and his four-year-old grandson. Having worked throughout his life tirelessly to provide for his family, age had definitely caught up with him. His eyes were blurry, his hands trembled, and his steps faltered. He was no longer the energetic young man he used to be when he took on several jobs and worked through the nights in order to give his family a comfortable life.

The family would eat dinner together every night at the family table. Due to his old age, the elderly grandfather's shaky hands and failing eyesight made eating rather difficult. Peas rolled off his spoon, dropping to the floor. When he grasped his glass of milk, it often spilled clumsily onto the tablecloth. As much as he did not want to, it was not within his control. With this happening almost every night, the son and daughter-in-law became irritated with the mess.

"We must do something about Father," said the son.

"I have had enough of his milk spilling, noisy eating and food all over the floor," the daughter-in-law agreed.

One evening, the couple came back home after work with a small table bought from the furniture store just down the street. They set up the table and placed it at the corner of the room.

That day on, Grandfather was told to eat at the small table. During dinner, he ate alone in the corner while the rest of the family enjoyed their meal at the dinner table. Since Grandfather had broken a dish or two, his food was served in wooden bowls. Sometimes when the family glanced in Grandfather's direction, he had a tear in his eye as he struggled to steady his hands with each spoonful of food. However, the only words the couple had for him were sharp admonitions whenever he dropped a fork or spilled his food. All this while, the four-year-old grandson watched it all in silence.

One evening, before dinner, the father noticed his son meddling with some wood scraps on the floor, seemingly trying to piece them together into something which resembles a bowl.

Out of curiosity, he asked the child sweetly, "What are you making, my dear?"

Just as sweetly, the little boy replied, "I am making a little bowl for you and mama to eat your food from when I grow up." The four-year-old smiled innocently and continued with his craft.

Those words struck the parents immediately, leaving them totally speechless. Tears started to stream down their cheeks after realising what they had done. It dawned on them instantly that unknowingly through their actions, they had set a bad example for their son from the way they had treated the old man – their father. Though no words were spoken, both of them knew what must be done. That evening during dinner, the husband took Grandfather's hand and gently led him back to the family table.

For the remainder of his days, Grandfather ate every single meal with the family, at the family table. For some reason, neither husband nor wife seemed to care any longer when a fork was dropped, milk spilled or the table cloth soiled.

KidZania is one of the attractions in Sentosa. It gives children between the ages of three and seventeen the chance to take on the roles of grown-ups. The setting is a kid-sized, interactive indoor theme park complete with a working economy. KidZania's brick-paved streets are lined with buildings whose storefronts bear the logos of recognisable brands such as Sony and McDonald's.

Unlike Disney's magical kingdom parks that promise fantasy and wish fulfilment, KidsZania is proudly a municipality where the children have to adhere to the guidelines of the theme park. Upon arriving at KidsZania, children receive a cheque for 50 KidZos which can be deposited into a bank and accessed with a realistic-looking debit card. The children earn a salary for participating in an activity such as assembling a car, moving furniture or putting out a fire with real water. The whole idea of KidsZania is to allow children to experience the real world in a fun setting.

Joss sticks have been an integral part of Chinese and Indian culture, associated mainly with prayer. In the past, there was another use for them: to tell _____ time. In ancient China, yi zhu xiang, _____ the burning of one stick, was used often to measure time, followed by liang zhu xiang - the burning of two sticks. Referring to the time it takes to burn _____ a joss stick, the measurements were initially inaccurate.

As time passed, incense makers standardised joss sticks for _____ to take a specific time to burn out. Even-spaced markings would be made _____ the joss sticks to calculate intervals of time and when the incense burned past a mark, the Chinese knew that a fixed duration had passed. For example, for a five-minute joss stick, the second mark out of five marks _____ indicate the passing of two minutes.

Subsequently, the Chinese improved on this further by inventing the incense clock. Suspended horizontally _____ a tray, weights would be placed at set intervals so that when a marked section of the joss stick got burnt out, the weight hanging on that mark would fall on the gong below the device, indicating the passing of an interval of time.

Today, the incense clock and the incense timekeeping method _____ been phased out in favour of more accurate and efficient timekeeping devices such as mechanical and quartz watches.

A reminder of one of China's older legacies _____ has withstood the test to time, replicas of the incense clocks -- _____ not in effective use - still remain on display today in more traditional homes as well as museums. Clearly, the joss stick remains an icon in the eyes of not only the Chinese but the modern world as well.

Caterpillar locomotion may seem like a simple matter of putting one set of feet in front of the other but it turns out there is more. So discovered a group of scientists which (40)

used konventionel video and synchronised X-ray to observe a tobacco hawkmoth caterpillar

(41)

(42)

as it strolled above a treadmill. They found that its gut, a tube that extends the entyre

(43)

length of the body attached only at the ends, shortens and lengthens rhythm, at times advancing up to a full sagmant ahead of the body.

(44)

(45)

"As soon as the caterpillar begin to crawl, we saw these tremendous internal movements occurring that we did not antisepte," said lead study author Michael Simon.

(46)

(47)

The scientists are unsure what purpurs the gut's undulating motion serves, though they believe it may help make locomotion more efficient or it may assists in digestion. After all, as Simon noted, the caterpillar is an "eating machine" whose primary function is to consume food or prepare to pupate.

(48)

(50)

The findings could aid in the design of soft-body robots for use in search-and-rescue operations. In such operations, it is crucial not to disturb collapsed structures.

The Chinese have been wielding chopsticks since at least 1200 BC and by AD 500, these utensils had swept the Asian continent from Vietnam to Japan. From their _____ (51) beginnings as cooking utensils to paper-wrapped bamboo sets at the sushi counter, there is _____ (52) to chopsticks than meets the eye.

The fabled ruins of Yin, in Henan province, provided not only the _____ (53) examples of Chinese writing but also the first known chopsticks – bronze sets found in tombs at the site. Capable of reaching deep _____ (54) boiling pots of water or oil, early chopsticks were used mainly for cooking. It was not until AD 400 that people began eating with these _____ (55). This happened when a population boom across China sapped resources and, left with no other choice, cooks were _____ (56) to develop cost-saving habits. For one, _____ (57) began chopping food into smaller pieces that required less cooking fuel – and happened to be perfect for the tweezers-like grip of chopsticks.

As food became bite sized, knives became more or less obsolete. Their _____ (58) and chopsticks' ascent – also came courtesy of Confucius. As a vegetarian, he believed that _____ (59) knives at the dinner table would remind eaters of the slaughterhouse. He also thought that the knives' _____ points evoked violence and warfare, killing the happy and contented _____ (60) that should reign during meals. Thanks in part to his teachings, chopstick use quickly became widespread _____ (61) Asia.

Different cultures _____ (62) different chopstick styles. Perhaps in a nod to Confucius, the Chinese _____ (63) to use chopsticks that featured a blunt rather than pointed end. In Japan, chopsticks were 8 inches long for men _____ (64) 7 inches long for women. In 1978, the Japanese became the first to create the now-ubiquitous disposable set, _____ (65) made of bamboo or wood. Wealthy diners could eat with ivory, jade, coral, brass or agate versions, while the most privileged used silver sets.

During the March holidays, Mahesh amped up his training routine by climbing the stairs in doubles. I was tasked with timing him at the peak – the twenty-fifth floor landing. Although I hated to admit it, his stamina was increasing. There were some days when he arrived at the top barely breathless, although his face was always red and his shirt soaked with sweat.

One day, I suggested that he probably took the lift for the first ten floors. I did not actually believe it but his reaction was worth it. Eyes wide with indignation, he screeched, "I didn't!" His voice echoed across the corridor. The door to one of the flats flew open and an elderly man poked his head out. He shooed us away with his hands and ducked behind the door. When he appeared again, he was carrying a straw broom and sweeping it vehemently in our direction. Mahesh and I giggled and bolted down the stairs to our home.

Our laughter came to an abrupt halt when we noticed our father's shoes outside our flat. We opened the door to find him on the phone in the living room, his anger just barely contained. "You need to give me a concrete reason for rejecting the visa. I won't get off the phone until you do." I knew that the rejection was from England because a week before, Canada and the United States had both said 'no'. England had not been his first choice – cities like New York and Toronto were more promising to him – and this made the rejection sting even harder. Our mother emerged from the kitchen and directed us to our room with her finger over her lips. Passing her, I noticed dark rings under her eyes.

When school started again, the days crawled slowly in the glaring white heat. Our HDB estate chugged along like fine machinery. For a few weeks, the void deck of Block 537 was inaccessible because it hosted two Chinese funerals, then a Malay wedding and then a pasar malam. Mum smiled at the orderliness of the night market's arrangements – leaflets announcing its arrival were slipped under our door. "They're advertising a market," she said delightedly. "In India, these things just happen." The cheer in her voice was false; we could all recognise the weariness that underlined her words. Every laugh was an effort towards convincing our father to accept Singapore as our final destination. They argued constantly behind shut doors, which was no longer forbidden.

Mahesh continued to climb the stairs. His calves became defined and his gaze purposeful. He fell asleep early every night and woke with a spring that I resented, since my adjustment to waking was always gradual and torturous. Then, one afternoon, our mother received a phone call from Mahesh's form teacher. He was doing poorly in all his subjects, she said. He needed to apply himself more. "He's applying himself to an important goal at the moment and when he becomes the first Singaporean to climb Everest, you will all see," our mother informed her. She hung up and burst into tears.

I was surprised that our mother had already considered ourselves Singaporeans.

Our former Prime Minister, Mr Lee Kuan Yew, shaped Singapore into what it is today.

Singapore is known all over the world to be a clean and prosperous city. He believed that a world-class city is indicative of a people with good social habits.

(16)

(17)

Mr Lee believed that changing the social habits of the people was important in keeping the country clean. Strong-willed Mr Lee was insistent that Singaporeans learn social graces. They would have to care for their surroundings – not to litter, spit, or destroy public property.

(18)

(19)

He wanted Singaporeans to learn the habits of productive workers – work hard and not slacken. He knew that the survival of Singapore depended on the willingness of the Singapore citizen to adopt good attitudes and values.

My ILLUMI Experience as a Volunteer

by Natalie Kwan, Volunteer 2016

The 'Party on the Run' has come back BIGGER and BETTER this year! Illumi Run 2016, held at Sentosa's Palawan Beach, saw excited participants having lots of fun at the Illumi Village. Everyone was sprayed with non-toxic colourful glow water. I found spots of neon orange on my T-shirt before the run even started!

Last year, the event attracted a young crowd—most of the runners were in their late teens. Though it is named Illumi Run, hardly anyone ran. Most of the participants took a leisurely stroll through the ultraviolet zones, striking fun, silly poses for the countless pictures they snapped along the way. I thoroughly enjoyed my job of having to patrol the beach while being treated to colourful light displays at the ultraviolet zones. There were many friendly volunteers like me on duty. We would encourage runners with high-fives and would even offer to help runners take photos with their friends.

The fun did not end there. Upon completion of the run, runners gathered for the after-run party. The youthful crowd raved to the beat enthusiastically, energetically waving their multi-coloured glow sticks in the air. The dance music really got the crowd moving to the groove.

Overall, volunteering for Illumi Run 2016 was a fun experience as the event was well-organised. The music was remarkably good for a running event, allowing participants of younger ages to enjoy an outdoor party experience. It has definitely been an eye-opening experience, allowing me to get to know people from all walks of life.

Do you have the passion for volunteering?
Have you wondered what goes on behind the scenes at each successful event?

To elephants, water is life. Rain means lush green grass and flowering fruits _____ soon follow. Every year, most elephant families led by a fearless matriarch walk many miles _____ their annual migration following the rains.
(29)

(30)

A family matriarch is typically the oldest and largest female in a herd of elephants. She tells the family what to do and _____ to go, especially when food sources dry up.
(31)

_____ some animal leaders, the matriarch does not win her role through fighting
(32)

_____ the other female elephants. She assumes the role because she is the wisest.
(33)

Elephants have excellent memories. A matriarch passes down the knowledge she has learned _____ many years to the younger family members. She remembers important things such as _____ to avoid predators, the locations of the best water holes, and

"The older the matriarch, the _____, A family led by an old matriarch benefits

Sushi is a popular dish. It can be bought anywhere, in the conveyor belt sushi restaurants to standing sushi bars. Sushi can be simple also sophisticated. This food phenominum from Japan has taken the world by storm.

(40)

(42)

The make of sushi has evolved over thousands of years. It is said to have been originated from Southeast Asia. The inovatif Japanese then hastened the fermentation process by adding vinegar to the rice using rice wine. It was not until the 18th century which sushi and raw fish were first kombind.

(43)

(44)

(45)

Around 100 years later, food stalls selling hand-pressed sushi dominated the streets of Tokyo. However, they were later forced to shut down during the post war period due to hyjean purposes. Nonetheless, sushi, together with its many new varieties, has continued to dominate Japanese kuisin not only within Japan, and also throughout the world.

(46)

(47)

(48)

(49)

This amazing sushi trend witnessed the emurgence of new variations, including the (50)

California roll. Now, sushi is no longer just food to stave away hunger. It is now known as one of the world's highest culinary art forms.

Walking in my garden one day, I spotted a charming sparrow. Instinctively, I _____ a photo of it. The sparrow made me realise how I had often overlooked the _____ (51) simple pleasures of life. This inspired me to come _____ (52) with the idea of a 7-Day Gratitude.Challenge.

Sunday : Say thanks to someone you love

It is easy to get either so busy _____ (53) distracted that you forget to appreciate your loved ones. Saying thanks for something simple, _____ (54) as when someone opens the door for you, can _____ (55) your relationship with your loved ones.

Monday : Express gratitude in school

Some of our friends feel underappreciated in school, but we can change that. Take time to tell your friends how _____ (56) they matter to you.

Tuesday : Enjoy the moment

If you are constantly distracted, you _____ (57) appreciate what you have. Hence, stop multitasking and slow down to enjoy _____ (58) activity at a time.

Wednesday : Play the Flip-It-Game

Every _____ (59) has a silver lining. When something _____ (60) you, find a reason to be grateful instead. Once a week, it will be great to _____ it a point to look (61) for the good in a negative experience.

Thursday : Surprise someone with gratitude

You can try saying thank-you to someone whom you do not usually thank. Doing so could encourage the other person to do _____. This will help to build a culture of thankfulness.

Friday : Give of yourself

Whenever you give your time to help someone who is struggling, it makes you aware of _____ fortunate you are. Knowing this makes you appreciate what you already have (63)
even more.

Saturday : Shout your gratitude out loud

Research shows that when you thank someone for what he had done, the effects will be immediate – for both _____ and the other party.
(64)

Gratitude can transform your life but it is not a miracle. You have to make it happen.

Are you ready for the _____ ? Try it today!

I will never forget the day that Joey, one of my newly-transferred students, shyly raised his hand and said he had never received a gift. My Primary 5 students had been tasked to share about the best birthday present they had received. The sweet boy had never experienced the joy of receiving a present in the past ten years of his life. Despite that, he did not once show sadness on his face.

I knew that his father was having a hard time holding down a job due to recession. Even though Joey was less fortunate, he always came to school with a smile. His peers took to him because he was helpful and generous.

A couple of weeks later, he was absent from school. It happened to be the day I was sending home the note about the Christmas gift exchange. Traditionally, each child was to bring a gift for another classmate that cost no more than three dollars.

As we were discussing the specifics, Karen raised her hand and suggested that we did away with our class tradition and each buy Joey a gift instead. We took a quick vote and all agreed to proceed with this wonderful idea. The enthusiasm grew as the students discussed the kinds of things they knew Joey would like.

15

With great excitement, the gifts began to come in. Some students would eagerly tell me how they had spent more than three dollars on Joey's gift! Amy found alien toys for Joey, remembering a paper plate spaceship he had made. It had many intricate details; truly a masterpiece. As the gifts came, I remembered my heart swelling with pride. My thoughtful students were demonstrating the spirit of selfless giving.

20

After several days, one could only imagine our disappointment when we learnt that Joey's absence was due to the fact that he had moved away! However, I was sure of one thing – I could not let any of my students down.

I found my class name list and called every number listed against Joey's name. There was no response no matter how many times I tried to call. Later, I found out from other parents that Joey's father had lost his job, causing them to relocate to another town.

Finally on Christmas Eve, I decided to try calling one last time. By then, I was so used to not getting an answer that I was startled when someone picked up the phone. Amazingly, Joey was on the line! I explained the story to Joey and told him how his classmates really wanted to do this for him. I immediately drove to Joey's new house after I had gotten their new address from his father.

30

As I drove there, I was thrilled at the thought of seeing Joey again. Finally, I was at their doorstep. Joey's face lit up when I told him that I had brought presents from the class for him. It took several trips back and forth to my car to get all of the gifts inside. I was relieved that I had an unopened box of chocolates in my car which I could give to Joey's father. We filled the room with all of the gifts that were specially for Joey. He was so grateful.

35

"You are such a dedicated teacher. You really made our day!" exclaimed Joey's father appreciatively.

As I walked away, I could no longer hold back my tears.

My life was very different from what it is today. When I was young, we lived in a run down wooden house on the outskirts of Sarawak. It stood on numerous wooden stilts and had a sloped roof of corrugated zinc sheets. Thus, the house was unbearably hot in the day and the tiny collection of rooms was barely enough for our ever-expanding family. We would run all over the house as we engaged in play and when we became too boisterous, the whole house shook. My mother would scold and frighten us with warnings that the house would collapse. Otherwise, she would throw us out into the eerie darkness. Then we would have to contemplate our actions.

I was glad to hear from my Japanese teacher, Sensei, but his letter also worried me. It was 1945. The British had just returned to Singapore. Sensei and the other Japanese had become Prisoners of War (POW). Young Singaporeans were anxious and confused having had to move from one ruling party to another.

I was surprised that Sensei had not yet been sent back to Japan. In fact, I was happy to learn that he was still in Singapore. He was well-treated and classified as a civilian, not a possible war crime suspect. My worry was for myself. I had received a letter from the enemy! Although the enemy was detained, the letter could have still attracted the attention of our new rulers, particularly some special police department responsible for keeping secret information about people in their colony. What if I were barred from education and deprived of jobs? Surely they were now watching me – to see how I would respond to Sensei's letter. Indeed the envelope looked as if it had been opened and re-sealed. 5 10

The memories came flooding back as I read Sensei's letter. The last time I saw him was at his home in Cavanagh Road, the time when Singapore was known as Syonanto. He had said, "Take these shoes. They're new. They look too big for you but you're still growing and someday they'll fit. I don't mind going into the POW camp in my old sandals." 15

I felt sorry for Sensei. He had been teaching in a school in Japan when the Japanese Imperial Army forced him to teach the Japanese language to the conquered people of Southeast Asia. My friends and I soon found him different from all those arrogant and nasty soldiers who treated us like dirt and imprisoned individuals based on their whims. Sensei provided his students with precious food rations, and more importantly, found them jobs. He stuck his neck out to help them. He even took the risk of speaking up for his students and their relatives who had somehow offended the Kempeitai, the all-powerful Japanese Military Police. 20 25

I remembered vividly that when my neighbour's father was detained by the Japanese Military Police for kicking a Japanese flag, my neighbour, Keong, went to Sensei for help. In his shoes, I might have chickened out. However, Sensei went to the Japanese Military Police, and got Keong's dad released. After this incident, Sensei was a hero in our eyes.

Sensei must have been feeling desperately low in his detention camp. I owed it to him to visit him. Looking back, I wondered why he had given me his shoes. Sensei was not one to show favouritism towards his students and the shoes were too big for me. Yet, I wondered if I would get blacklisted if I went to visit him. 30

Much to my relief, my fears were groundless. When I eventually visited Sensei, I left the detention camp unscathed. During the visit, Sensei explained that he had given me the shoes as a sign of our friendship but I was filled with sadness as I could not reciprocate Sensei's kind gesture. As I left the prison, I wondered what I could do to help my teacher as he seemed to be so sad to see me go even though he was exuberant when I arrived. 35

The goblin shark is definitely not a beauty. Luckily, the goblin shark does not need to look pretty since it is found in the ocean depths. A distinctive trait is its long protruding blade-like snout. It also has a pink body which is pretty unusual but, by far, the most (16) bizarre aspect of this shark is its jaw – it has an extendable jaw with sharp teeth. The usefulness of this feature had been a heated discussion among scientists but they agreed (17) (18) that this extendable jaw makes it easier to catch prey.

The average length of a goblin shark is 1.6 metres and the longest recorded length is 3.8 metres. These animals are as slow as tortoises, which can make it hard for them to chase food. Although research suggests that it is not a particularly rare creature, the (19) goblin shark lives mostly in areas which are uninhabited. This makes it difficult to track it for long periods of time. (20)

LET'S CYCLE!

An estimated one billion people ride bicycles every day – for transport, recreation and sport. Shouldn't you be a part of them?

Do You Know...?

The first bicycles were completely different and were not as comfortable as now. In 1817, the concept of cycling was invented by Baron Karl von Drais. What he invented wasn't exactly the bicycle which we know and use. It did have a typical bicycle frame and two wheels, but it was propelled by walking as opposed to pedalling.

You just need two to four hours a week to see its benefits.

Cycling is:

- Low impact – less strain and injuries than most other forms of exercise
- A good muscle workout – uses all of the major muscle groups
- Easy – does not require high levels of physical skill
- Good for strength and stamina – increases stamina, strength and aerobic fitness
- A fun way to get fit – experience the thrill and adventure of going down hills and being outdoors
- Time-efficient – reduces time spent driving motor vehicles or using trains or buses

Before you start, here are some safety tips.

Obey traffic lights and road signs.

Look behind you before you turn, overtake or stop.

Don't cycle next to another person on busy or narrow roads.

Use arm signals before you turn right or left.

Never use a mobile phone while cycling.

Don't use headphones while cycling.

When cycling past parked cars, watch out for car doors opening suddenly and allow room to pass safely.

A good working bicycle is a must. If you are buying a second-hand bicycle or you have an old bicycle that has been gathering dust, consider having it serviced at a bicycle shop to ensure it is roadworthy.

If you are buying a new one, there are plenty of models to choose from.

Mountain bikes are the most popular among cyclists. A bicycle specialist can advise you on the correct frame size and help you select a bicycle to suit your budget and the type of cycling you want to do.

For most people, cycling is a safe and effective form of exercise. If you have any health concerns or an existing medical problem, see your doctor before you start.

Some Fun Facts About Bicycles

- About 100 million bicycles are manufactured worldwide each year.
- There are over a half billion bicycles in China today. Bicycles were first brought to China in the late 1800s.
- A bicycle can stay upright without a rider as long as it is moving at 13 kilometres per hour or faster.
- On a bicycle, you can travel three times faster than you can walk using the same amount of energy.

It was 1.00 p.m. at Novena Food Centre and the popular hawker centre was bustling with a lunchtime crowd. Sean, the son of a police officer, had a Labrador pup called Minnie. Minnie's parents had been excellent police dogs so what more natural that she, too, should be given a trial at the K-9 training school. She seemed healthy and strong, with sturdy legs and a proud, firm head.

It required less than a week, however, to discover that Minnie was not going to make it. She just did not have the right qualities. Obedience, for instance. On the third day, her handler tried teaching Minnie to run and fetch a stuffed bear. She thought it was some kind of joke and instead of bringing it back and dropping it at the handler's feet, she tore it apart. Then she hid it in a bush, knocking down several bean poles along the way. On the fourth day, Minnie was taught to jump through an open window. Instead, she picked a closed one. You could hear the smashing glass for miles. The inspector who was in the office was not amused.

That was the end of Minnie's career as a police dog. With some hesitation, her handler who was Sean's neighbour, suggested that Minnie, though difficult to train, might turn out to be a reasonable house dog and pet. He approached Sean's father and told him about her history. Hesitantly, Sean's father agreed to give her a try. Sean, who had never had a dog before, was delighted. He started his own course of training at once. Sometimes he wondered if his neighbour was all that good as a dog handler. Perhaps he simply had not understood Minnie. She had a mind of her own but she could be obedient in her own way.

Most evenings, Sean took Minnie for walks along the nearby canal. This particular day, late in September, was misty, muddy and damp. As they were walking silently, Sean discovered that Minnie's collar had come off again, somehow. Instinctively, she sped off. The collar could not have come off easily. Sean's father had insisted on it fitting Minnie well as she was big for her age and Sean was small for his. Nevertheless, Minnie had only to tug hard, and Sean had either to let go or take off and fly like a kite on a string.

Normally when Minnie disappeared, she would pick up Sean's footsteps and return to him, but that night she seemed to take ages. Seeing and hearing no evidence of Minnie's whereabouts, Sean tried his familiar canal path. Minnie would turn up eventually, wagging her tail, showing her teeth and oozing black mud which smelled of garbage.

A few minutes later, there she was, at last. She had a remarkable grin on her doggy face. However, she carried an unfamiliar floral scent. Perfume, maybe. Sean did not bother to refit her collar. She followed him closely for a while and then became distracted. Something in the distance had caught her eye. Sensing her uneasiness, Sean gave her some biscuits which he had found in his pocket. He watched her gobble them up and she continued sniffing along the path.

Suddenly, a girl came whizzing by, travelling with incredible speed and skill on a skateboard. There were shopping bags in each hand. Minnie liked little girls, especially if they were moving fast. She bounded after the girl who was thrown off balance. Her shopping bags were flung out of her hands, spilling tea, flour, eggs and bread.

"I'm sorry," said Sean. The girl scowled and snapped, "Leave me alone!" At that moment, when he turned around, he realised that Minnie was nowhere in sight. However, this time, the wait was much longer and futile. She never returned.

I had decided to take the route across the dry bush-covered Kalahari Desert on my way to Windhoek in South-West Africa. This indistinct trail (16) concealed by dry bushes would cut my journey by a thousand kilometres. Having started on this journey, I now found myself really out of luck. A slow leak had emptied the radiator of my car and I was forty kilometres from the nearest village of the indigenous bushmen. (17) Dejected, I could not help wishing that I had a burst tyre instead – I could have changed it without any help.

I had been sitting in the car for an hour, trying to decide whether to pour the last of my drinking water – about three litres – into the radiator or down my throat. I knew better than to venture out. Although there was no (18) imminent danger from wild animals, the Kalahari, with its sudden dips and rises, is a deceptive place. Turn around a couple of times and you are lost. I was not (19) optimistic about my journey ahead.

The sun flared (20) murderously overhead and made an oven of the car. There was no breeze and, to add to the discomfort, stinging sandflies were beginning to mass on the inside of the windscreen. All this was bad enough but not until I spotted a Bushman – a member of the hunting and gathering people of Africa – did I feel any sense of real danger.

Although we are a young nation, Singapore, like any other country, has its fair share of legends and myths. Most Singaporeans (29) _____ aware of the popular folktale of how the name Singapura came about. However, (30) _____ about the other lesser-known legends of Singapore? Many are clueless about these. What is known as Sentosa now was (31) _____ called Pulau Blakang Mati, where Blakang Mati means "behind the dead" in Malay.

No one knows exactly how the name of the island came (32) _____ but there have been many legends about its origin. According to one version, the island (33) _____ once a place of piracy and bloodshed. The victims of the murders haunted the island (34) _____ much that it was given this not-so-auspicious name. Another account was that the island was located "behind" Pulau Brani (35) _____ was the burial ground of many ancient Malay warriors.

Nevertheless, (36) _____ 1972, Pulau Blakang Mati was renamed as Sentosa, which means "isle of tranquillity". (37) _____ the island becoming a favourite beach resort among Singaporeans, the unhappy legends were soon forgotten. Cyber bullying is on the rise in Singapore. A large-scale study has found that one in nine adolasents said they have been victims of cyber bullying and close to half of them 40.

have, in turn, bullying others online. "The findings are signifikent because the use of 42.

technology is becoming more pravelant and if we are not careful, the problem will grow and 43.

we will have an increase unhealthy online culture," said Ms Iris Lin, senior social worker at Fei Yue Community Services.

44.

Cyber bullying is bullying in cyberspace where harm is intenshenali and repeatedly inflicted upon an individual with the use of social media. Kaunsellers say victims easily turn 47.

45.

on bullies themselves because they learn to imitated behaviour that they know causes hurt.

"Such behaviours are also normalised and they become desensitised. The more abuse they 49.

receiving, the more mean they become to others," said Mr Poh, a consultant at a cyber-wellness firm. Cyber bullying certainly needs to be adressed seriously. Measures must be taken to promote responsible online habits in schools.

50.

Fill in each blank with a suitable word.

The Dusky Dolphin is a remarkable creature. Dusky Dolphins are usually found in cool waters throughout the southern hemisphere and seem to prefer (51) _____ to deep waters. Big fat drops started falling from the sky, quickly forming puddles on the road surface. Several people hurriedly held their briefcases above their heads and hastened for shelter. Bob looked up in dismay. Ditching his initial plan of waiting for a bus, he followed them. Trust it to rain on the day of his job interview! There was a time when he could splurge on luxuries. Unfortunately, he could not afford to do so after being jobless for the past few years. This job, if he clinched it, would turn the tables. No more eating microwave food for dinner; finally, a decent meal for his family. All he had to do was pass the interview. To do that, he needed to make an excellent first impression. How could he do it if he was late? Luckily, the unrelenting pelts of rain masked the hot tears that were flowing down his cheeks, away from prying eyes. He was desperate to get to that job interview.

Pushing his way through throngs of people, Bob ran to the nearest shelter he could find, which happened to be the train station. "My previous plan didn't work, but perhaps I could still make it if I take the train," he thought. An elderly lady accidentally knocked into him, causing the contents of his briefcase to fall out. "I'm sorry, I didn't..." she said. Bob cut her off, gesturing it was fine and hurriedly gathered his things. Once he reached the platforms, he was crestfallen when he saw that notices had been put up everywhere informing of a ten-minute delay. Time dragged by in an excruciatingly slow manner. Many people around him were tapping their feet, checking their watches while some were trundling their trolley bags along the platform.

15

Ten minutes came and went. Something was wrong. The floor was flooded. The pipes had burst and water began gushing out. The ceiling was leaking. Panic ensued, followed by a chaotic rush to the exits where a bottleneck had formed. As Bob made his way to the exit, he saw the elderly lady who had knocked into him earlier. She was obviously struggling to hobble along amidst the commotion, clutching her walking stick with her frail hands for her dear life. Fear was written clearly on her face. Though it would slow him down further, his heart went out to the old lady. "Auntie, let me help you," he muttered and without waiting for a reply, he placed her hand on his right arm. She was jittery at first but her tense muscles soon relaxed. After some time, they made it out of the flooded platform. Not wanting to forsake the old lady, he decided to help her to her destination. After all, there was no way he could make it for his interview now.

Noticing his obvious gloom, she asked, "Son, why do you look so sad?" Bob sobbed bitterly, "I have been jobless for years. Finally, I was going to go for a promising interview today but the heavy rain ruined everything! Maybe I am just a failure. That's why no one wants to employ me." He could almost hear his wife chiding him for saying that. "You are a talented and hard worker. No one has discovered that about you yet. That's all," she would say.

The lady replied, "Don't worry. You are a decent man. I am sure things will work out for you once the financial crisis the country is facing is over." Hearing her encouraging words, he brightened up. The skies had cleared up by then as well. "This is my destination," the lady said. The words "Zane and Zane Law Firm" caught Bob's attention. Having been lost in his thoughts, Bob had not realised where he was heading. "This was where my interview was supposed to have been!" he remarked as an immaculately-dressed young man rushed out to meet the old lady.

"Grandma, it was a horrible storm! I was so worried for you!" he cried out. The old lady told him about Bob's timely help and selflessness. Her grandson looked at Bob with gratitude.

"Is it too late for a job interview now?" Bob asked, hopefully. "I think you have already passed your interview with flying colours!" the young man exclaimed, as he patted his grandmother's hands gently. "My company needs more people like you!"

"Whoever gives me the finest gift will inherit my kingdom," an old king announced. Two young princes, Richard and John, stepped forward. They had heard about a splendid golden shield (16) in a neighbouring city and were anxious to get it. On the way to that city, Richard was attacked by robbers who made off with all his money. John sped past on his horse and bought the golden shield. (17)

On the way back, John was waved down by a poor sick old man who begged for a ride home. (18) "Not now!" shouted John as he spurred his horse, and left without a backward glance. (19)

"I'll help you," said Richard who had witnessed the exchange, "just lean on me." After a slow climb up the hill, the old man thanked Richard and handed him an apple which he called a 'fineapple'. (20)

At the palace, the king said, "The golden shield is indeed magnificent. But this is the finest gift!" he declared, holding up the 'fineapple', "for the giver stopped to help me when I was disguised as a poor sick old man."

Vincent van Gogh hardly sold any paintings in his lifetime. Today, _____ (29) paintings fetch record prices and are well-known all over the world. He was born in Holland in 1853 _____ a Dutch pastor. During the 1870s, he worked for art dealers in London and Paris, visiting art museums and exhibitions whenever he _____ (30)

_____ (31)

In 1876, he decided to follow _____ his father's footsteps and train as a pastor. In _____ (32)

the winter of 1878, van Gogh _____ sent as a trainee missionary to work in the mining _____ (33) district in Belgium. There he lived in extreme poverty and became closely involved with the lives _____ (34)

_____ the miners and their families. It was during _____ period that he began _____ (35) sketching the sad figures of the miners. He painted simple, ordinary working people in _____ (36) _____ natural working environment.

In 1888, van Gogh moved to France and began painting _____ another artist, _____ (37)

Paul Gauguin. However, they had many conflicts. Their frequent quarrels resulted in van Gogh _____ (38) slashing his _____ left ear in a fit of anger. By 1889, van Gogh had become mentally ill _____ (38) and was finally admitted to a mental asylum. In spite of his lack of success when he was alive, van _____ (38)

Gogh's legacy lives on in the world of art.

There are only ten female pilots flying Air Asia's fleet in Thailand. Chananpom Rosja must (39) be the most famous to them all as she also holds the Miss Thailand/Universe 2005 crown. While (40)

there has been a siknifikant rise of women in other fields such as law, medicine and engineering, (41)

female pilots in the aviation industry were still under-represented.

(42)

"Everyone has an equal opotuntee to succeed. Women working in a male-dominated (43)  (44)

industry should never used their gender as an excuse not to succeed. Espiering female pilots must have the passion to fly and be aware of the responsibilities and challenges in store for them," says

Chananpom.

Sitting in the pilot's seat does come with her fair share of challenges. There are issues such (46)  (47)

as steer the aircraft through turbulence and bad weather, hectic work skeduels and handling (48)

difficult passengers. There are also the long-haul flights when can take a pilot away from home for several days. There have been times when Chananpom had to miss important birthdays and anerversirees as well as bonding time with her family and close friends.

(50)

"These are part and parcel of the job. I feel blessed being able to pursue a kareer that I love," says the lanky pilot. Chananpom admits she has her share of suitors but has remained single.

The video game Angry Birds has become something of a global obsession. Angry Birds now appear on T-shirts, bags and stickers. All this makes you wonder _____ real birds can get angry. (51)

Ornithologists, _____ are experts in the study of birds, think so. When birds get angry, anyone near them are in _____ of being attacked. Birds may get angry when they feel that their nests or chicks are being threatened. For example, the kingfisher is known for its aggressive _____ if it sees intruders in its breeding territory. It has been observed chasing away other birds that come too _____. (52) (53) (54) (55)

Bird attacks do often come with warnings. These creatures first show their irritation in a number of _____. They may flash their brightly-coloured feathers to warn intruders to keep _____. Sometimes, they may crouch into an attack position or fluff their feathers and _____ their wings to appear larger and scarier. It is _____ all these displays are ignored that they lunge and start attacking their intruders. (56) (57) (58) (59)

Sometimes, birds see themselves reflected in glass windows and mirrors. They mistakenly think that their reflections are other _____ threatening their territory and begin to attack them. Obviously, the 'intruders' refuse to back _____. These are battles that have to end in a draw. (60) (61)

Recent research has also shown that birds like crows can _____ grudges for a (62) long time. They seem to remember the faces of people who have harmed them. _____ (63)

Even months later, coming face _____ face with those same people can agitate the (64) crows.

So, the next time you go out for a walk, _____ a lookout, for birds and watch (65) them closely. If you see a bird that is showing signs of being upset, it is best to keep calm and move away slowly.

BLANK PAGE

Ah Seng limped painfully past the shopfronts. Glancing down, he noticed that the right leg of his pants had been stained red. It was pure luck that he had managed to escape from the armed security guard at the jewellery store. He had been driven to desperation to commit the armed robbery with his gang as his parents needed money for their medical expenses. "At least now I don't have to share the spoils with them," Ah Seng thought, tightening his grip on the loot he had managed to slip away with in the commotion. 5

A dizzy spell hit Ah Seng. Tripping over the bars of a stationary rickshaw, he landed face down on the road. His right leg exploded with pain. Suppressing a scream, Ah Seng tried to get back on his feet. He hugged the black bag tightly to his chest. Darkness overcame him. 10

Ah Seng opened his eyes and saw a wrinkled old face in front of him. He looked around. He was lying on a bed in a clinic. Remembering his bag, Ah Seng searched frantically around him.

"Are you looking for this?" The old man picked up the bag from behind his stool. Ah Seng snatched it back. 15

"Thanks. It contains everything my father left me before he died" Ah Seng said.

"So it must have been your father who robbed the jewellery store last night," the old man mocked. "I am not interested in selling you out to the police. In fact, I can treat you if you wish. I am worried that you will bleed to death from the bullet in your leg."

Ah Seng raised an eyebrow. "And how much would your treatment cost?" 20

"It is up to you how much you want to pay. One thing though, you cannot stay here for too long. By the way, you can call me Wu," the old man said as he rummaged through his medicine cabinet.

Wu sorted out the herb packets in his basket. He chewed and spat the paste onto the wound. He started kneading the flesh around the wound. Wu gave a squeeze with one hand and pulled a small metallic object out of Ah Seng's leg. The pain was excruciating. Ah Seng fainted and was unconscious for several days. 25

When Ah Seng awakened, he unwound the cloth and looked at his calf. No pain at all! He got up to look for Wu. He was pleased that he could walk normally.

"Hey, Wu! I am all well now! How much do I owe you?" 30

"Not much. The herbs cost a dollar and fifty cents. If you can cover that, I would be grateful."

Ah Seng opened the bag and grabbed five gold necklaces. He pushed them over to Wu. The old man cracked a smile. Suddenly a loud crashing sound interrupted them. Seven burly men stood at the door. Ah Seng recognized them immediately. 35

"Ah Seng, my friend! I think you have taken something from us," the leader said with a menacing smirk. He kicked a nearby chair with force, causing it to overturn. The group of gangsters closed the distance between the two helpless men – one who had just recovered from injury and the other one who was quite advanced in age – and them. With only the two of them in the clinic, Ah Seng and Wu were outnumbered. 40

Weighing the odds, Ah Seng knew it was useless putting up a fight. He glanced around the clinic for an escape route for him and Wu.

Each of the underlined words contains either a spelling or grammatical error. Write the correct word in each of the boxes.

Children and the elderly are especially vulnerable to pneumonia. In Uganda,

39)

Unicef estimated that the disease kills up to 24,000 children under five years of 40)

age every year, many of whom were misdiagnosed of malaria.

Ms Koburongo and four others have invented a biomedical smart jacket that 41)

detacks and analyses pneumonia symptoms in children. The prototype is designed to be worn by a child, and its sensers are designed to pick up sound patterns from 43)

42)

the lungs, tempreture and breathing rate.

"The jacket diagnoses, measures the extent to which the disease has affected the lungs and also enabling doctors to track the progress of the disease since the diagnostic information is shareable," said Mr Brian Turyabagye, one of the founders of the project.

45)

The team is seeking certified for its award-winning innovation from Uganda's

46)

Ministry of Health. According to study carried out by its inventors, the jacket can 47) diagnose pneumonia up to three times faster than a doctor could, and reduces human error significantly.

48)

After displaying the result, the jacket's in-built application goes on to advise the user on the appropriate action. The beauty of the innovation is that it allows doctors to gauge the severe of the disease from the point it is first diagnosed. If the condition of the patient is acute, it advises the user to seek medical treatment at the nearest hospital.

49)

Read this passage and answer questions 71-80.

My family and I arrived at the refugee camp after my father's death in the war. We were allocated an area where we built our home out of plastic sheets and wooden planks. We soon settled in and were looking forward to a new beginning when the Vietnamese bombing disrupted the camp. We ran for our lives and in the chaos, I was separated from them. 5

I kept walking even after the sun had set. The sky was still tinged with gold, but I knew that soon everything would be swallowed up in the darkness and my visibility would be affected. I would have to stop searching for my family.

In the fading light, I could make out the silhouettes of all the tall watch towers in the distance, rising on their bamboo stilts above the deserted land. I kept heading 10 towards them since they marked where the Nong Chan Refugee Camp was.

It was already dark when I reached the watch towers. Scattered campfires had been lit near them, as if we, refugees, found it reassuring to be sheltering near these landmarks. Parents and children stayed together, thankful to have each other. The women sorted out their leftover belongings, mumbling prayers of thanks. Many others 15 had not bothered to build a fire, but had just clustered on the ground, sleeping under the open sky. I wondered what Mother was doing now. She would be worried about me but at least, she had Sarun, Nea and Grandpa.

Tomorrow, I promised myself, I would go on looking. Tomorrow I would find them. For now, the tree in front of me looked old and solid. I lay down under it and felt for the 20 marble in my shirt pocket. Immediately, I was comforted by it. It was there, smooth and round. I took it out and with it in my hand, I fell asleep.

When I woke up, it was afternoon. There were already people up and about, packing their bundles of clothes, ready to move on. I lingered around, eavesdropping on conversations. What I heard was disturbing. There was an air raid last night. Villages 25 were destroyed by the bombs, and it was expected to be carried out again. The men discussed this at great length but nobody seemed to have any clear sense of what to do. What everyone did seem convinced about was that the fields here at Nong Chan would be unsafe for at least the next few days and that we should seek shelter elsewhere. Listening to this, I felt a stab of fear. It would be harder to find my family as 30 the next air raid would scatter us further apart.

My thoughts were interrupted by the rumbling engine of the lunch truck. The growl in my stomach suggested I should get some food. I approached the truck and that was where I saw the familiar wooden signpost! Forgotten were my hunger and sore feet, I wanted only to get home and throw myself into Mother's waiting arms. Almost 35 running, I headed towards the signpost and past the well, the one I had been searching for. I could hardly keep from laughing out loud as I ran the last stretch home.

It was then that I stopped. There was nothing there. All that was left were some wooden planks and torn plastic sheets. In my confusion and hopelessness, I heard a familiar voice. I turned around and saw Sarun waving at me. Tears welled in my eyes as 40 I ran towards him.

A Treasure Trove of Origami

Article contributed by Debbie Tay

Hello, everyone! I am the founder of the website, A Treasure Trove of Origami. Have you heard of origami? To put it simply, it is the art of paper folding. It originated from Japan and is still a popular hobby there. The goal is to transform a piece of paper into a finished sculpture through different folding techniques. By combining a small number of basic origami folds in a variety of ways, one can create many interesting designs. I always find it amazing that I can make adorable animals or pretty flowers just by folding paper!

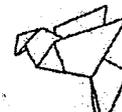

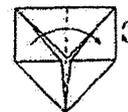

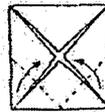

Over the years, I have come up with hundreds of step-by-step guides that are suitable for all ages. My family and friends are my most supportive guinea pigs! They use the guides, then give me valuable feedback about how to improve on them. Last year, I decided to put all my guides online so that those who want to start a new hobby can see how easy it is to get started on origami. You can visit my website at www.ttoo.com.sg and be spoilt for choice because there are just so many free guides for you to choose from! On top of that, you will find special origami paper that you can purchase. I hope my website makes it easy for you to give origami a try!

PUTTING MY GUIDES TO GOOD USE!

I have a 12-year-old child and I've been serving her primary school as a Parent Volunteer for 6 years. Every year, I help out in post-exam activities by conducting free origami classes for the pupils. They tell me that my step-by-step guides are easy to follow! I love to see how their faces light up when they complete the last step!

Braille is a system of touch reading and writing for blind persons in which raised dots represent the letters of the alphabet. Braille is read by moving the hand _____ left to right along each line. (29)

In the early 1800s, a man named Charles Barbier, _____ served in the army, developed a unique system known as "night writing" so soldiers could communicate safely during the night. The problem _____ Barbier's "night writing" system _____ that the human fingertip could not feel all the dots with one touch. (30) (31) (32)

Louis Braille, the inventor of braille, was inspired to improve Charles Barbier's "night writing" system after he saw it. Louis was blinded at a very young age _____ he accidentally stabbed himself _____ the eye with his father's tool. Despite the best care, infection set in and soon spread to the other eye, leaving him completely blind. (33) (34)

_____ time, braille gradually came to be accepted throughout the world as _____ basic form of written communication for blind people. Louis Braille's legacy _____ enabled millions of blind people to read. (35) (36) (37)

Today, braille code is transcribed in many different languages worldwide and people who are blind _____ enjoy reading just like everyone else. Braille has helped the blind to achieve success in school and in their careers. (38)

Camels have long been known for their ability to go for weeks at a time without needing to drink water.

Camels are also _____ for their prominent humps, which leads many people to believe that these are used to _____ water for use at a later time. However, camels' humps actually store fatty tissue, _____ water, which is used as a source of nourishment when food _____ scarce.

So why do camels store fat in these humps _____ of having it spread equally throughout their bodies, like other mammals? Camels typically live in the desert, where food sources can be hard to come _____. When a camel is unable to obtain food for a long period of time, its body is able to burn the _____ in the humps for energy. The humps can deflate and droop if the camel has _____ a particularly long time without food, but they will become upright again once the camel has eaten. Apart from providing nourishment, the camel's humps also help the animal regulate its body _____. This is an important feature in the desert, where temperatures can be extremely high during the day and drop drastically at _____.

_____ the humps do not store water, camels are still incredibly efficient in the amount of water they use per day, which is why they are able to go nearly a week _____ drinking. This is partly due to the unique shape of their blood cells which _____ oval. Oval-shaped blood cells _____ camels to consume large amounts of water.

A camel's humps are incredibly important for the animal's _____ in a tough environment like a desert. Without its humps, a camel would be more likely to overheat and sweat — but it is still the oval-shaped blood cells that help the camel retain so much water, not the humps.

David's thoughts were disturbed by the sound of the car. It sounded wrong, as though the engine was not running properly. He stood along the roadside and watched. It moved along at no more than a walking pace. It was an American car, not Italian.

The Americans had always acted as if they were proud of possessing so much. There was one thing, however, that this American couple did not possess: they had no petrol, and that was why their car would not go. David took a step towards them. 5

The woman was talking in a loud angry voice that did not sound at all pleasant. David was more nervous than he usually was before speaking to someone in English as it was not his native language. She stopped when David asked the man if he could help by fetching petrol for them. 10

They were both very glad to accept David's offer and David suggested that he should take their petrol can and go to the village farther up the side of the hill. "But I haven't any money to pay for the petrol," David said as he took the petrol can.

As the man was about to take some money out of his pocket, the woman said quickly, "He's nothing but a young beggar! You can be sure if we give him money we shall never see him again! He can fetch help from a petrol station up there..." 15

She did not think David would understand what she said. He wondered if they thought he was stupid; they certainly seemed to think he could only understand them when they spoke very slowly.

The man asked him whether he could get a mechanic to drive down with the petrol. "The petrol can's a bit too heavy for you to carry," he made up an excuse. 20

David turned his back on the woman. "The people here don't like doing very much on Sundays, and so I can't be sure I will find anyone willing to drive down," he explained politely. "But I'll see if I can get the petrol by promising to pay for it later. Unless, of course, your wife thinks I want to keep your petrol can." 25

The man looked uncomfortable. "Rubbish, boy," he said, "then you'd have to go twice! My wife was only thinking you might drop the money in the dark ..."

As David took the note he was offered, he looked the man straight in the face "Will you look after my bag while I go?"

Both the man and the woman went red in the face, and David set off without waiting for an answer. They were ashamed of themselves and that was all David wanted. He had never taken anything which was not his - only fruit growing on trees and bushes and things he found. One had no right to take other people's possessions; that he was sure of. 30

When the people at the petrol station in the village heard that it was an American car that had run out of petrol, they insisted upon sending one of the mechanics down with enough petrol to fill the tank, and as David had to return anyway to fetch his bag, the mechanic gave him a lift on his scooter. 35

David handed the American his unused note and, taking his bag, turned to go. "Wait a bit, boy, I should give you something for your trouble." 40

David would have been too glad to earn something: he was in desperate need of money to buy a loaf of bread for the next day. But he could not bring himself to take it now. He did not want to earn it from someone he did not like.

"No, thank you," he said firmly. "I like to earn money sometimes but only when I want to. I don't need any today."

Sleep is an important part of our daily life. It is food for the brain. For our body to function at its (16) optimal level, we need to have enough sleep. Healthy sleep habits are (17) important to maintaining a healthy mind and body. A lack of sleep can cause all sorts of physical and mental problems, from mood changes to overeating. Generally, how much sleep a person needs is dependent on one's age. For example, toddlers need about ten to twelve hours of sleep a day while adolescents need about eight to nine hours of sleep.

However, most of the time we get less than the (18) sufficient hours of sleep. This could be due to the daily stresses, insomnia or frequent nightmares that result in a lack of quality sleep. To ease this problem, we should (19) set up healthy bedtime habits such as sleeping at a regular time and (20) staying away from caffeinated drinks. Putting away the electronic devices allows the mind to wind down and have a better rest at night too.

Since 1859, orchids have been closely associated with the Singa Botanic Gardens. Breeding 2 or more species of orchids together results in a new hybrid orchid. The products of the orchid breeding programme, which began in 1928, deserve a place where they can be displayed in their full splendour. The design of these orchids is 'hand-crafted' by the horticultural staff who are dedicated to bringing out the finest in any hybrid.

It offers a permanent showcase which is the largest collection of orchids in the world. Over 1000 species and 2000 hybrids are now on display. Every year, more vibrant hybrids will be added on.

Burkill Bungalow

It was built in 1866 and situated at the highest point in the Gardens. It has a commanding view over the Temasek Orchid Garden, the Palm Valley and the Rain Forest. It was designed to be cool and airy with high ceilings and broad verandahs on the first floor. The wooden pillars are made from a single trunk of the native Tempinis tree.

Once home of the Gardens' directors, the bungalow is now used to host important events and functions.

Jubilee Heritage Garden

Singapore has been a centre of orchid breeding from the 1930s. Some early hybrids have left significant footprints in the world of orchids and have become part of Singapore's floral heritage. These hybrids have been internationally awarded, have become important in the cut-flower trade or have been named after historical figures. Some are important as breeding stock for many of today's hybrids. Vanda-Miss Joaquim was chosen to be the National Flower of Singapore in 1981. This exquisite flower was discovered by Miss Agnes Joaquim in her garden in 1893.

Chill House

Trees and rocks are draped with spectacular orchids and carnivorous plants. The cool air and drifting mist provide a highly realistic representation of the tropical forest and will be an unforgettable experience for you.

One orchid to look out for is Bulbophyllum echinolabium, which boasts the largest flower in its species. Its spectacular blooms can measure up to 30 cm long and can last for about 10 days. It is native to Sulawesi and Borneo. Many more interesting orchid species can be found in the Chill House. Come and spot them!

Noble Orchid Garden

It was carefully styled and sited as an English backyard garden of Burkill Bungalow. It features the outstanding orchid hybrids of the Gardens' orchid programme. As Singapore orchids gained fame, it became obvious that they should be used as agents to promote goodwill and foster closer ties between nations. The government has honoured State visitors and other delegates by naming selected orchid hybrids after them.

For each question, four options are given. One of them is the correct answer. Make your choice and shade the corresponding oval (1, 2, 3 or 4) on the Optical Answer Sheet.

"But why," the stranger had enquired, "why would you ever want to go (55) _____ for man-eating tigers? They are cunning and evil, and they eat so many (56) _____ who are doing their best to avoid them! You are sure to be killed. You should stop such foolishness now."

After hearing the stranger's words, Tessa and I were nervous (57) _____ returning to the site that morning. Section I – Comprehension (Open-ended) (20 marks)

Read the passage and answer questions 71 to 80.

Suzanne was the child of a single mother named Madeline, who was an illiterate peasant. Being uneducated, her mother could only work as a washerwoman and earned just enough to put food on the table for the both of them. As they barely made ends meet, they had to be thrifty. There were weeks when business was so bad that they earned nothing and had to beg for stale leftovers from neighbouring restaurants just to stifle their gnawing hunger pangs.

Whenever orders for washing did come in, Suzanne's mother would be too exhausted by the end of the working day to offer her young daughter any company. Therefore, young Suzanne was often left to her own devices. She grew up feeling terribly alone, sometimes even wondering if her mother really cared for her at all.

Suzanne had no playground but the streets. While out playing, she saw street vendors, usually stout women with hands covered in rough skin, selling fruits and vegetables. They created such an impression on her that she would sometimes scratch pictures of them on the pavement with a piece of charcoal given to her by a sympathetic coal man.

Suzanne dreamt of becoming an artist one day. However, she had to put that on hold. There were other pressing needs like acquiring a livelihood which commanded her attention and time. Suzanne only attended primary school until the age of eleven before she had to start working.

Suzanne first worked as a dressmaker's assistant who took the orders of rich ladies when they came to have their dresses made. She subsequently waited on tables and even trained and performed as an acrobat in a circus. Unfortunately, a fall from a trapeze caused her to suffer a broken leg and she had to stay in the hospital for months. The accident put a stop to her short-lived career as an acrobat. Nevertheless, Suzanne continued to draw even when she was in the hospital. During that time, she used the plaster cast on her leg as a canvas for her drawings. After she had recovered, she returned to help her mother out in the laundry business.

One day in 1880, Suzanne delivered a load of washing to an artist's home. The artist, Chavannes, noticed her graceful manners so he asked her to become his model. Thus, Suzanne embarked on her new job of modelling for other artists over the next ten years. During her modelling career, she continued to draw. She would occasionally sell her drawings for a small sum of money in order to supplement her income. The subjects of her drawings were always the poor working people of her childhood.

Then, Lady Luck dealt her a fair hand in life. Suzanne's drawings were accidentally spotted by the influential artist, Lautrec: He liked what he saw and decided to find out more about the artist. He then met up with Suzanne and introduced her to a fellow artist friend, Degas, who then trained her in the Impressionist style of painting. Both Lautrec and Degas encouraged Suzanne to pursue her passion and she worked very hard at it. Degas was so impressed with Suzanne's tenacity and brilliant artwork that he organised a solo exhibition for her. From there, her fame as an artist took flight. In 1894, Suzanne became the first woman painter to be admitted into the prestigious National Society of Fine Arts in France.	40
Despite the ups and downs of her personal life, Suzanne remained dedicated to her art until her very last days. As she related shortly before her death, "My work is finished and the only satisfaction I gain is that I have never surrendered. I have never betrayed anything that I believed in."	45
